But, if murder isn't getting rid of those worthless eaters in europe, how are you going to get rid of them? Sounds like you have a pest eradication problem to me ...

We have gangs and violent offenders on the street here in the USA. Since no one has been doing much about it, it has gotten pretty bad. We do need a lot more gun owners to help and clean up the place for normal people ... people have a way of doing what is necessary ... in the end. I am betting this will take care of itself ...

Well, the spanish, when they established themselves as the ruling class of mexico, looted all their wealth, and sent it back to spain ... they brought the horses with them. So, naturally, it took a bit to breed up a sufficient quantity of horses and get the indians educated on how to ride 'em ... they learned pretty quick though ... damn indians didn't have a whole bunch of need for slaves though ...

Oh, I wouldn't force anyone. The dummies which don't want to participate might even wish to place a nice red sign on their doors saying they don't own guns. That if someone wants to do a quick

Well, just look what you said - it's either one extreme or the other.
I'm not getting nasty - just wondering where you sense of moderation is. There are ways to defend one's home without having to worry about shooting your ear off. Moreover, nobody has ever robbed my home or anything else (except I had a radio and a Bible stolen from a car - I got the radio back, but the Bible stayed stolen!). I am not going to live in a state of fear and paranoia.

I have no problem with people wanting to have guns to defend their homes...but there are other ways.

I kinda think of the USA as the new rome. I see parallels ... what I see, really killing rome, was the citizens "just walked away." Brought the whole thing to an end ...

I really think we may be seeing that now ... will be awhile before the effects are really seen, though.

Like her boss Barack 0baMa0, Ohio Democratic JackAss Congresswoman
Mary Jo Kilroy has been accused of hiding a radical past.

Further evidence has emerged confirming that Congresswoman Kilroy was once a member of America's largest marxist organization Democratic Socialists of America.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6428
http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Democratic_Socialists_of_America

In an earlier post New Zeal provided documentary evidence that Kilroy was a member of DSA in the early 1990s and was supported by that organization in both her 2006 and 2008 Congressional races.

http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2010/08/mary-jo-kilroy-covert-socialist.html

Now comes more confirmation of Kilroy's socialist ties from an article in Oakland, California-based marxist journal, CrossRoads, October

Not really. Europe is vastly different from US in so many respects it may take entire volumes just to list only some of them. To begin with-each European state (oops,nation) had/has an established church or religion . Linguistic and cultural history makes them quite hostile to Absolutely, in America, we can trust out neighbors, they will show up with weapons to guarantee our safety ... in europe, you would wait for the cops to show up which will find your murderer ... something which I would simply find useless ... my gun will halt the murder! Dead criminals don't count! but, hey, you already knew that, didn't ya'?

Thank you Mike. The "real" shortwave listeners need to take back control of this group. That is why I started my responses to that "Obama" character. I am a little jealous of your dx catches with your Eton from KY, I am only one mile from the Atlantic, and I am trying to get BCBDX from Europe. I did pick up Saudi Arabia on 1521 when Buffalo was off the air. Unfortunately, it only lasted about ten minutes. I try and use my CCrane SW(same as the RP-2100). I bought it on John Plimmer's advice and his good luck with the portable. My old RF-2200 still pulls in the DX with its swivel antenna, but with analog tuning and two crystals for tuning accuracy, it is a bear to get on frequency. I would have it aligned, but where I live is a desert for radio repairs. I did get a Radio Shack SelectTenna loop, and it really helped, but I would really love a Kiwa loop like John's!

I've been having a great deal of MW luck with two Sony 2010's w/

Paul Gallo said somebody once sent him something called a Rotornator (something like that) for getting rid of Moles.He said you have to use a big air compressor and a wand, like you use to wash your car with.He said it looks like it would tear up the whole yard, so not sure it is a good idea.

Veganism has a lower ratio for "food energy" to work, to produce the food you need to stay alive.

In a survival situation, the best options are things that allow for maximum energy/storage with a degree of simplicity.

You can starve to death or suffer malnutrition more easily while relying on Vegetables only, utilizing "all" food sources is a smarter idea.

The Teeth in the Mouth of a Human Indicate that by-nature Humans are "Omnivores" and should Eat anything that they can find . . .
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Omnivore

'Special Dave' Which part of this is not 'Vegan' ?
* 10 Lb Bag of Cracked Wheat
* 10 Lb Bag of Rolled Oats
* 10 Lb Bag of Rice
* 10 Lb Bag of Beans
* 30 Cans/Bags of Spinach Large -or- Dried Seaweed

Plus any Fresh 'Greens*' if you can find them . . .
-such-as- Dandelion

JS,

Not say that you should NOT have some Gold and Silver too; as a Back-up to Basic 30-Day and 60-Day Family Daily Living Survival Stuff that you can Eat & Drink and Just Keep your Family Alive with . . .

IMHO - The Order of Things :

1ST is to have the Basic 30-Day and 60-Day Family Survival Living Stuff. "Be {Being} Prepared" and Fully Self-Sufficient [Foundation Daily Living Stuff]

2ND is to have 60-Days Plus Cash-on-Hand [Locked-Box at Home]

3RD after accomplishing #1 and #2 then Gold and Silver are a very good long term back-up option to have on hand.
[Buried Locked-Box near Home]

Remember #2 and #3 are only good if someone is still willing to-sell and part-with all the Items in #1. ~ RHF

In metropolitan areas like the San Francisco Bay Area, the content is definitely there on the HD sub-channels. Not only is the content excellent, there are almost no commercials (though the reason for the lack of ads is that the penetration of HD receivers is still relatively low).

Personally I think that the new Insignia radio is ridiculously priced and that you'll see them being sold for $30 within a few months after the introduction. OTOH, surprisingly, the previous model was very successful, being sold not only by Best Buy, but under the "Mighty Red" brand name where it quickly sold out.

If you want HD Radio in a portable device, buy a Zune HD 16GB for $158 from Amazon. Most people want HD in their vehicles and homes. For homes, get the Sony XDR-F1HD. For vehicles, if you have a DIN or Double DIN dash opening there are plenty of choices, but for many vehicles with custom factory entertainment systems you can get add-on HD radio that uses the "satellite ready" functionality of the system.

"The People v. HD Radio"

"It's not quite going in that direction - yet - but another law firm has opened an inquiry into "defective" HD Radio receivers in high-end automobiles. The first firm on the scene, Keefe Bartels, is now soliciting consumer complaints about problems with HD Radio reception. Details are few, but there's always the chance - if a lawsuit is filed - that the plaintiffs could push for class-action status. Both firms appear to be working in concert. That would be a significant nail in iBiquity's coffin: receiver manufacturers, already unenthused with the product, will stay well away from the technology. If the law firms' primary beef seems to be that "HD" has been implied to mean "High Definition" (which it has), they need to dig deeper; there are plenty of more substantive counts on which to indict the technology. There's also the possibility that lawsuits could be filed between radio stations suffering interference from other stations that have deployed HD side-channels. Since the FCC is doing nothing with at least three pending complaints, the victim-stations suffering HD-induced interference may have no recourse but the courts. Were any of these legal potentialities to be realized, "game-changer" is not strong enough to denote the consequences."

It's mobile where it's most important. And you do _not_ get all the HD Radio channels vial AOL or Clear Channel, far from it.

And of course a tuner is not costly either. That's three errors of fact in one statement!

Obama’s 2008 campaign finance records are full of riddles, mysteries, and unanswered questions. It was I who broke the explosive news stories of Obama’s contributions from Gaza (Hamas-controlled Rafah)

http://www.americanthinker.com/2008/08/obamas_donor_contributions_sil.html

http://atlasshrugs2000.typepad.com/atlas_shrugs/2008/07/obamas-gazan-co.html

and of how he lied about refunding those jihad donations — not to mention the tens of millions of dollars Obama received in donations from foreign countries

http://atlasshrugs2000.typepad.com/atlas_shrugs/2008/08/those-gazan-con.html

— not to mention the tens of millions of dollars Obama received in donations from foreign countries

(scroll this link)
http://atlasshrugs2000.typepad.com/atlas_shrugs/obamas_foreign_contributions/

Contributing nearly $25,000 to the Obama campaign was Monir Edwan, who was listed on FEC documents as contributing from the city of Rafah in the state “GA.” Georgia? No – there is no Rafah in the Peach State. Monir Edwan sent money to Obama from Rafah, Gaza.

Rafah is a Gaza refugee camp.

According to the FEC, contributions to the Obama campaign from three brothers, Osama, Monir and Hossam Edwan, all from Rafah, totaled $33,000. And they weren’t alone. Al-Jazeera reported on March 31, 2008 that Gazans were manning phone banks for the Obama campaign. Here is video of those Gaza phone banks.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=X6x0gkfnkNk

The Obama campaign claimed that they had returned $33,500 in illegal contributions from Gaza – despite the fact that records do not show that it was returned, and the brothers said they did not receive any money. And indeed, Obama’s refunds and redesignations on file with the FEC show no refund to Osama, Hossam, or Monir Edwan in the Rafah refugee camp.

When I confronted Congressman Jerrold Nadler (D-NY) about the Gaza phone banks issue in South Florida in early November 2008, he said that if there “really were phone banks in Gaza, that would be a major campaign issue.” But he laughed at the idea that Obama was receiving campaign contributions from Gaza. The mainstream media laughed with him, continuing its refusal to cover this explosive story.

And to this day Obama’s foreign contributions have never been investigated.

OCT 8 2010, 10:00 PM ET An election year already notable for its menagerie of extreme and unusual candidates can add another one: Rich Iott, the Republican nominee for Congress from Ohio's 9th District, and a Tea Party favorite, who for years donned a German Waffen SS uniform and participated in Nazi re-enactments.
Iott, whose district lies in Northwest Ohio, was involved with a group that calls itself Wiking, whose members are devoted to reenacting the exploits of an actual Nazi division, the 5th SS Panzer Division Wiking, which fought mainly on the Eastern Front during World War II. Iott's participation in the Wiking group is not mentioned on his campaign's website, and his name and photographs were removed from the Wiking website.

When contacted by The Atlantic, Iott confirmed his involvement with the group over a number of years, but said his interest in Nazi Germany was historical and he does not subscribe to the tenets of Nazism. "No, absolutely not," he said. "In fact, there's a disclaimer on the [Wiking] website. And you'll find that on almost any reenactment website. It's purely historical interest in World War II."

Iott, a member of the Ohio Military Reserve, added, "I've always been fascinated by the fact that here was a relatively small country that from a strictly military point of view accomplished incredible things. I mean, they took over most of Europe and Russia, and it really took the combined effort of the free world to defeat them. From a purely historical military point of view, that's incredible."

Iott says the group chose the Wiking division in part because it fought on the Eastern Front, mainly against the Russian Army, and not U.S. or British soldiers. The group's website includes a lengthy history of the Wiking unit, a recruitment video, and footage of goose- stepping German soldiers marching in the Warsaw victory parade after Poland fell in 1939. The website makes scant mention of the atrocities committed by the Waffen SS, and includes only a glancing reference to the "twisted" nature of Nazism. Instead, it emphasizes how the Wiking unit fought Bolshevist Communism: Nazi Germany had no problem in recruiting the multitudes of volunteers willing to lay down their lives to ensure a "New and Free Europe", free of the threat of Communism. National Socialism was seen by many in Holland, Denmark, Norway, Finland, and other eastern European and Balkan countries as the protector of personal freedom and their very way of life, despite the true underlying totalitarian (and quite twisted, in most cases) nature of the movement. Regardless, thousands upon thousands of valiant men died defending their respective countries in the name of a better tomorrow. We salute these idealists; no matter how unsavory the Nazi government was, the front-line soldiers of the Waffen-SS (in particular the foreign volunteers) gave their lives for their loved ones and a basic desire to be free. Historians of Nazi Germany vehemently dispute this characterization. "These guys don't know their history," said Charles W. Sydnor, Jr., a retired history professor and author of "Soldiers of Destruction: The SS Death's Head Division, 1933-45," which chronicles an SS division. "They have a sanitized, romanticized view of what occurred." Sydnor added that re-enactments like the Wiking group's are illegal in Germany and Austria. "If you were to put on an SS uniform in Germany today, you'd be arrested."

Christopher Browning, a professor of history at the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill, said, "It is so unhistorical and so apologetic that you don't know to what degree they've simply caught up innocent war memorabilia enthusiasts who love putting on uniforms."

Iott says he does not recall exactly when he joined the Wiking group (his name appears on a unit roster as far back as 2003), but did so with his son "as a father-son bonding thing." He says his name and pictures were removed from the Wiking website not out of concern that they would harm his political career, but because he quit the group three years ago, after his son lost interest.

Iott participated in the group under his own name, and also under the alias "Reinhard Pferdmann," which has also been removed, and which Iott described as being his German alter ego. "Part of the reenactor's [experience]," Iott said, "is the living-history part, of really trying to get into the persona of the time period. In many, not just in our unit, but in many units what individuals do is create this person largely based on a Germanized version of their name, and a history kind of based around your own real experiences. 'Reinhard' of course is 'Richard' in German. And 'Pferdmann,' 'pferd' is a horse. So it's literally 'horse man.'"

Asked whether his participation in a Nazi re-enactor's group might not upset voters, particularly Jewish voters, Iott said he hoped it would not: "They have to take it in context. There's reenactors out there who do everything. You couldn't do Civil War re-enacting if somebody didn't play the role of the Confederates. [This] is something that's definitely way in the past. ... [I hope voters] take it in context and see it for what it is, an interest in World War II history. And that's strictly all."

Rabbi Moshe Saks, of the Congregation B'nai Israel in Sylvania, Ohio, a suburb of Toledo that sits in the 9th district, disagreed. "Any kind of reenactment or glorification of Nazi Germany, to us, would be something unacceptable and certainly in poor taste, if not offensive," he said. "I think the reaction here will be very negative. And not just among the Jewish community, but the broader community."

In a follow-up email today, Iott seemed at pains to address concerns that his conduct may have alienated veterans groups but made no specific mention of possible offense to Jews or human rights groups: "Never, in any of my reenacting of military history, have I meant any disrespect to anyone who served in our military or anyone who has been affected by the tragedy of war. In fact, I have immense respect for veterans who served our country valiantly, and my respect of the military and our veterans is one of the reasons I have actively studied military history throughout my life." He added that he has participated in re-enactments as a Civil War Union infantryman, a World War I dough boy and World War II American infantryman and paratrooper.

The actual Wiking unit has a history as grisly as that of other Nazi divisions. In her book "The Death Marches of Hungarian Jews Through Austria in the Spring of 1945," Eleonore Lappin, the noted Austrian historian, writes that soldiers from the Wiking division were involved in the killing of Hungarian Jews in March and April 1945, before surrendering to American forces in Austria.

"What you often hear is that the [Wiking] division was never formally accused of anything, but that's kind of a dodge," says Prof. Rob Citino, of the Military History Center at the University of North Texas, who examined the Wiking website. "The entire German war effort in the East was a racial crusade to rid the world of 'subhumans,' Slavs were going to be enslaved in numbers of tens of millions. And of course the multimillion Jewish population of Eastern Europe was going to be exterminated altogether. That's what all these folks were doing in the East. It sends a shiver up my spine to think that people want to dress up and play SS on the weekend."

"Just as the Left was drawn to the communist killing machines of Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Pol Pot, and Castro, so too it is now attracted to radical Islam."

"The contempt that German Hitlerytes had for "Bolshevism" or "marxist Jews" generally should also not mislead us in assessing the similarity between National Socialism and Communism. Leftist sects are very prone to rivalry, dissension, schism and hatred of one-another. One has only to think of the Bolsheviks versus the Mensheviks, Stalin versus Trotsky, China versus the Soviet Union etc. Similarity does not preclude rivalry. Hitler and Stalin were literally brothers in arms BEFORE they became rivals. That socialist brothers sometimes fall out should not prevent us from noting the brotherhood concerned."

"The fundamental dogma of all brands of socialism and communism is that the market economy or capitalism is a system that hurts the vital interests of the immense majority of people for the sole benefit of a small minority of rugged individualists. It condemns the masses to progressing impoverishment. It brings about misery, slavery, oppression, degradation and exploitation of the working men, while it enriches a class of idle and useless parasites."

"This doctrine was not the work of Karl Marx. It had been developed long before Marx entered the scene. Its most successful propagators were not the Marxian authors, but such men as Carlyle and Ruskin, the British Fabians, the German professors and the American Institutionalists. And it is a very significant fact that the correctness of this dogma was contested only by a few economists who were very soon silenced and barred from access to the universities, the press, the leadership of political parties and, first of all, public office. Public opinion by and large accepted the condemnation of capitalism without any reservation."

"The term 'planning' is mostly used as a synonym for socialism, communism, and authoritarian and totalitarian economic management. Sometimes only the German pattern of socialism-Zwangswirtschaft-is called planning, while the term socialism proper is reserved for the Russian pattern of outright socialization and bureaucratic operation of all plants, shops, and farms. At any rate, planning in this sense means all-around planning by the government and enforcement of these plans by the police power.

Planning in this sense means full government control of business. It is the antithesis of free enterprise, private initiative, private ownership of the means of production, market economy, and the price system. Planning and capitalism are utterly incompatible. Within a system of planning production is conducted according to the government's orders, not according to the plans of capitalists and entrepreneurs eager to profit by best filling the wants of the consumers.

"But the term planning is also used in a second sense. Lord Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Professor Hansen, and many other eminent men assert that they do not want to substitute totalitarian slavery for freedom. They declare that they are planing for a free society. They recommend a third system, which, as they say, is as far from socialism as it is from capitalism, which, as a third solution of the problem of society's economic organization, stands midway between the two other systems, and while retaining the advantages of both, avoids the disadvantages inherent in each.

"These self-styled progressives are certainly mistaken when they pretend that their proposals are new and unheard of. The idea of this third solution is very old indeed, and the French have long since baptized it with a pertinent name; they call it interventionism. Hardly anybody can doubt that history will link the idea of social security, more closely than with the American New Deal and with Sir William Beveridge, with the memory of Bismarck whom our fathers did not precisely describe as a liberal. All the essential ideas of present-day interventionist progressivism were neatly expounded by the supreme brain-trusters of imperial Germany, Professors Schmoller and Wagner, who at the same time urged their Kaiser to invade and to conquer the Americas. Far be it from me to condemn any idea only on account of its not being new. But as the progressives slander all their opponents as old-fashioned, orthodox, and reactionary, it is expedient to observe that it would be more appropriate to speak of the clash of two orthodoxies; the Bismarck orthodoxy versus the Jefferson orthodoxy.

The following is from The World Book Encyclopedia, 1947 edition:
The chief characteristics of Fascism are as follows:

THE CULTIVATION OF IGNORANCE

Fascism, like all forms of government, rests firmly on the sincere consent of a large part of the population... To maintain this consent, the Fascist leadership must cut off the people from any information which might cause them to doubt the complete rightness of the fixed Fascist principles... All forms of communication are carefully censored, so that the public will receive only those facts that the dictators want known... Travel to other countries must be controlled, and freedom of speech and assembly must be rigorously suppressed...

SUPPRESSION OF LABOR AND INDUSTRY

Fascism in Italy and Germany at first won the support of the wealthy classes, both landed and industrial... These people saw in Fascism a protection against the demands of farmers and other workers... Both regimes at first upheld the rights of private property... They subjected the working classes to a rigorous discipline... As soon as they were firmly established, the dictators began to limit profit, impose capital levies, and regulate business in great detail...

Employment Rates under Liberal Fascism

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=9ssIhiD8kKM

.....sound
familiar?.....

THE POLICE STATE

Fascism depends upon the police to crush all opposition or dissent. Secret police spy on the whole population, and any casual remark against the regime leads to swift and severe punishment... Opposition parties are dissolved. Intellectual, athletic and recreational organizations are usually brought under the control of the Fascist authority... The ruthlessness of the police gradually becomes less noticeable... This is because within a year or so after a Fascist government takes power, vigorous opponents of the regime have either left the country, been killed or jailed...

(Both Fascist and Communist leaders make use of the police state... Every absolute government has used the police state to some degree... It was highly developed among the ancient Assyrians...)

EXTREME NATIONALISM

Fascism is highly nationalistic... It tries to identify its principles with the country, so that disagreement will look like treason... Some other country, or some group within the country, is chosen to serve as the "enemy" and made to appear as the cause of all evils or misfortunes... For example, the Nazis in Germany represented their movement first as a crusade against the Jews, then as a fight against Communism and later as a struggle against the "attacks" from whatever neighboring country they wished to subdue or occupy... Extreme nationalism often becomes a kind of racial fanaticism... Sometimes it combines racial and religious bigotry...

When you hear the Liberal Fascist propaganda that THEY are the true patriots then you know the time is near. Look for it from the socialist Labor Unions such as the SEIU!
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6535

MILITARISM

Fascism maintains among the people a permanently warlike frame of mind... Every citizen feels that he is mobilized against enemies of the regime from within, and against possible foreign foes... The dictator usually comes to power during a period of economic crisis or depression... He relieves the depression partly by employing many people in the making of armaments... To justify this procedure, he must convince the people that the country is threatened, and must point toward some of the enemies against whom the armaments may be needed...

AM has been on the downfall for decades now. FM and HD Radio has taken it's toll on the AM stations for quite a while. Although I do listen occassionally to AM, I'm not interested in sports, and quite honestly, this is about all AM has to offer anymore. AM used to be my only source of radio, but it has dried up as far as interesting music from the old days have passed onto FM now. I don't think it has a whole lot to do with the recession though. The revenue has dried up becasue there isn't the audience there used to be so the ratings have dropped - and as a result, advertising dollars are going to other media sources where people listen more.

When I talked with Keefe, I kind of, kiddingly, suggested that the general public should file a class-action for iBiquity "breaking" all of our AM radios (and affected FM, as well). iBiquity has probably ruined many AM DXing hobbies. Keefe is going after dealerships first, then would escalate the investigation depending what comes out in "discovery" phase.

First, there is no suit. Second, no additional law firms have opened inquiries, it's just like any class action where the originating law firm pays a commission to other firms that bring it clients. Third, by "secondary coverage" you probable mean "coverage outside the protected contour" which was never guaranteed to be interference free forever (even without IBOC the FCC could have granted a license to a station whose primary coverage would interfere with another station's "secondary coverage"). Fourth, if there is actual interference, within the protected contour, that can't be resolved between the alleged interferer and the inteferee, the proper procedure is to file a complaint with the FCC, which AFAIK has not been done by the station John works for.

John Boehner's PAC Donated To Rich Iott, GOP Candidate With Nazi Interest
The Huffington Post | Elyse Siegel First Posted: 10-13-10 07:09
PM | Updated: 10-13-10 07:28 PM

House Minority Leader John Boehner's political action committee -- Freedom Project -- has reportedly contributed thousands of dollars to the campaign of Republican congressional candidate Rich Iott, who recently came under fire after footage surfaced of him taking part in World War II reenactments dressed in a Nazi uniform.
According to Politico, quarterly donation documents filed with the Federal Election Commission on Wednesday show that Boehner's PAC gave $5,000 to Iott, who is running to oust Democratic incumbent Rep. Marcy Kaptur from Ohio's 9th district House seat.
Don Seymour, a spokesman for the Freedom Project, told POLITICO
Boehner would make no effort to recoup the money.
Iott spokesman Matt Parker said there would be no reason for Boehner to withdraw his help.

Joshua Green at the Atlantic first reported on the conservative contender's participation in the WWII reenactments: Iott, whose district lies in Northwest Ohio, was involved with a group that calls itself Wiking, whose members are devoted to re-enacting the exploits of an actual Nazi division, the 5th SS Panzer Division Wiking, which fought mainly on the Eastern Front during World War II.
Iott's participation in the Wiking group is not mentioned on his campaign's website, and his name and photographs were removed from the Wiking website.
Iott told Green that despite his decision to take part in the reenactment, he is not an adherent of Nazism. The GOP hopeful explained, "It's purely historical interest in World War II."
A spokesman for Boehner's PAC told Politico on Wednesday that the organization doesn't intend to recover the funds it donated to Iott's campaign.

"It sends a chilling message to all Americans, especially to our veterans and to those of the Jewish faith, that John Boehner and the Republican leadership in Washington would actively seek out a candidate like this and embrace him," said Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee spokesman Ryan Rudominer.

Meanwhile, House Minority Whip Eric Cantor, who is the lone Jewish Republican serving in the House, made a point to distance himself from Iott and the political firestorm that erupted around the controversy.

You may be interested to know that I was the staff planner here at Alameda County for KTRB, and I have the very first QSL from that station (my little perk). That was a fun permitting project (for a change). I had not heard this news - too bad.

Folks may (or may not ;-) be interested to know that I was the Alameda County staff planner for the KTRB radio station, and have the very first KTRB QSL (my little perk). It was a fun planning permitting job (for a change). Sad to hear this.

Tune in KFIV 1360 Modesto, Dave Diamond ... he has cops on butt licking their little wet bottoms and keeps beating the drum that they are our great protectors ... I liked it the way it was way back in the 1960's, bad citizens feared the good ones and it kept everyone in check ...

Mike I bought a Sangean 909 and never used it just to have a reliable short wave portable receiver, after 3 months I powered it up and found that the speaker was very distorted, when I complained to the company I found that they would not give me any information other than they would repair the problem for $152.00.

I will never buy a Sangean product again.

Democratic JackAss Congressmen are willing to collude with marxists in order to promote socialist legislation and to influence the political direction of the United States.

This is how the modern Democratic JackAss Party actually works – in partnership (often junior partnership, at that) with hard core marxists.

chairman of the powerful House Judiciary Committee, has been caught on tape meeting with members of the U.S.'s largest marxist organization, Democratic Socialists of America - DSA.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6428
http://keywiki.org/index.php/DSA

The tape clearly shows Conyers treating the marxists as friends. He continually refers to the gathering as "we," as he urges the comrades to rally behind his "beloved 44th president," Barack Obama.

The website clearly states that this is a Democratic Socialists of America meeting and Conyers is introduced to the gathering by DSA National director Frank Llewellyn.

http://keywiki.org/index.php/Frank_Llewellyn

Prominent Boston Democratic Socialists of America member David Duhalde

http://keywiki.org/index.php/David_Duhalde appears on the right, behind Llewellyn, wearing a beard, black T shirt and a cap.

Llewellyn then notes Conyers' "long support for HR 676, the single payer Bill that this organization [DSA] has long supported."

DSA has indeed "long supported HR 676," which sprang from the "single payer" health care movement midwived by Chicago physician and DSA member Quentin Young, a close personal friend of both John Conyers and President Obama.

http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Quentin_Young

At about 34 seconds, Llewellyn states, “many might not know that John is in the process of introducing sweeping legislation to address the jobs crisis – which is certainly one of the most important crises we face and one of the reasons why we’re all here today.”

At 60 seconds Conyers starts talking, addressing Frank Llewellyn by name and then says,

Its good to know that a lot of my Michigan and Detroit and Grosse Point people are here. David Green, and Dave and Herman and probably others.

David Green is a leader of both Michigan and national DSA.

http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/David_Green

Green visited Cuba in 2009 and proved his marxism with this statement in the Spring 2007 issue of DSA’s Democratic Left.

"What distinguishes socialists from other progressives is the theory of surplus value. According to Marx, the secret of surplus value is that workers are a source of more value than they receive in wages. The capitalist is able to capture surplus value through his ownership of the means of production, his right to purchase labor as a commodity, his control over the production process, and his ownership of the final product. Surplus value is the measure of capital’s exploitation of labor.

"Our goal as socialists is to abolish private ownership of the means of production. Our immediate task is to limit the capitalist class’s prerogatives in the workplace…

"In the short run we must at least minimize the degree of exploitation of workers by capitalists. We can accomplish this by promoting full employment policies, passing local living wage laws, but most of all by increasing the union movement’s power…

"The Employee Free Choice Act (EFCA)
[Card Check] http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/viewSubCategory.asp?id=828 provides an excellent organizing tool (i.e., tactic) through which we can pursue our socialist strategy while simultaneously engaging the broader electorate on an issue of economic populism.

This is one of John Conyers’ “people.” Coincidentally, Conyers is also a big fan of the EFCA.

After a “new agey” rave about the “oneness” of everything (cut out of this video), Conyers thanks the gathering for coming to the march and at 1:30 minutes goes on to say:

"This is an important event, that we don’t doubt will be played down and misinterpreted by the corporate media…We understand the significance of it. We know that when unions, political ideology, clergy, labor, civil rights come together… and just people that are progressive enough to see in this one World concept, that we're all in this together, it makes certain things easy to understand where we're coming from.

At 2:25 minutes, Conyers talks about "peace" and Dennis Kucinich:

"Overriding it all is the quest for peace in the world…and I am firmly supporting Congressman Dennis Kucinich's measure that would make a Department of Peace in the United States Federal government. (applause)

John Conyers

http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Dennis_Kucinich
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=630

was once an affiliate of the Soviet front World Peace Council.

http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/World_Peace_Council

Like Kucinich, Conyers also has a long history with the Communist Party USA, which has consistently advocated such measures.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=7511

At 4:20 minutes Conyers moves on to the "question of my beloved 44th president of the United States."

Conyers criticizes America's war in Afghanistan and how "we" need to "make it clear to him, through all the usual means of communication, including pickets and protests….there probably isn't anybody above the 10th grade who doesn't know that you cannot win a war in Afghanistan." (laughter).

At 7:35 minutes Conyers says of Obama:

"I respect him, I support him… I say that all against the backdrop, of the fact that in 2012, there is a highly organized effort to make sure that he is a one term president.

"This started even before he was sworn in. It's grown… I only mention the Tea Party, because it is small and dismissible, but there are much more serious and affluent sources behind this effort to interfere with a re-election campaign of Obama… I've got to ensure he is re-elected 2 years from now. That calls for some balancing, but not a whole lot from where I stand."

At 6:10 minutes Conyers goes on to deal with how those assembled need to help Obama:

"I see that us making him more cooperative with our plans is going to strengthen him and not weaken him… (applause) And to have this press secretary of his denouncing the left is an automatically dismissible act, if I were president…

"The whole point is that, trashing progressives and the left, and at the same time watching your ratings go down – gee… what's so difficult about figuring that out?… Whose job do you think it is to get him straightened out and get him on the right track? Ours! Ours! (applause)

Democratic Socialists of America has tried to publicly distance itself from Obama in recent times, though they have a twenty-seven year history with the President. Even Conyers has publicly criticized the President.

http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Barack_Obama
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=1511
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=2339

Clearly, John Conyers understands he is among friends, who are just as pro-Obama as he is. In private, Conyers and DSA are right behind their man.

Like Obama, John Conyers has a long history with DSA.

John Conyers was a special guest on day one of the Democratic Socialist Organizing Committee/New American Movement Unity Convention in Detroit March 21/22, 1982, that resulted in the formation of DSA.

http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/New_American_Movement

In 2003 John Conyers was a keynote speaker at the DSA national conference in Detroit — with 2008 Obama Black Advisory Council member, Cornel West, http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Cornel_West

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=813

and the first journalist to promote Obama on the national stage, the Washington Post's Harold Meyerson.

http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Harold_Meyerson

In 2005 DSA's Democratic Left, Spring edition, called Congressman John Conyers "(a key D.S.A. ally in Congress)…"

THE REAL SECRET of contemporary U.S. Politics is this:

Under today's Democratic JackAss Party, much of the legislation they push for is not made by Democrats. It is actually formulated by organizations close to DSA and the Communist Party. It is then infiltrated into Congress by socialist sympathizers like John Conyers and his comrades, in the more than eighty strong, DSA co-founded Congressional Progressive Caucus.

http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Congressional_Progressive_Caucus
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6497

Socialized health care, the grossly mis-named Employee Free Choice Act, the current push to “normalize” relations with Cuba, even the campaign for a national holiday in honor of DSA and the Communist Party’s best friend, Cesar Chavez, are all communist/socialist initiatives.

http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Cesar_E._Chavez_National_Holiday

If this sounds far fetched, remember that in most U.S. states the Democratic JackAss Party is almost totally dependent on labor unions for manpower and money.

Since DSA member John Sweeney became president of the AFL-CIO in 1995, http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/John_Sweeney

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=2009

the once anti-communist U.S. labor movement has come under near complete marxist control.

He who pays the piper, calls the tune.

The Democrats simply put a “respectable” face on policies originated by tiny, but hugely influential marxist sects.

Think of it this way. Just as the Mafia once used “respectable” front-men to control Las Vegas casinos, the marxists use “respectable” Democrats, kept in line with labor union “muscle,” to control your Houses of Congress.

That’s how it works America.

If you don’t start throwing the Democrats out of office come November, your children may inherit a country permanently ruled by these people.

I was watching an old movie the other day and heard a voice that struck me as familiar and I realized I was looking at the man behind the voice to ROCKY AND BULLWINKLE'S "Fractured Fairy Tales" the narrator that told the tails.....

That was just weird seeing his face.

I liked Bullwinkle, I even write subject lines here with an " -OR- " between the two subjects that use irony or sarcasm. Like they had stories on Bullwinkle with morals to the story with the two twists on the story.

You have to PAY to repair a faulty new product on? Don't you get a standard 12 month warranty in your country? Were you complaining to Sangean or to the company from which you bought the radio?
> I will never buy a Sangean product again.

Sangean radios are not top end products. You buy them and immediately check them out upon getting them home. That way you can immediately return it to the shop if faulty and get a replacement. That said, my 505 works adequately though I admit I rarely use it for shortwave. It looks cheap and plasticky and it's my AM/FM general purpose unit for when I am working outside or in the garage as it has better audio than my Sony SW7600. Horses for courses I guess

You miss what I'm saying, Roy. Damned near everyone uses radio in a car. But that's listening only in the car. And that usage only comes to about 30% of the total usage of radio. The other 70% of listening, according to research, including the ratings surveys, is done at home, at work, or other usage that's not in cars. The bulk of it being done in the home.

Automobile listening is actually a secondary usage of radio.

The ancestors of the "peace loving people of Pakistan" made Alexander the Great turn back. They have been in a state of constant war through most of their history. They are a warrior tribe. Even the mighty British were in a big surprise in their attempt to subdue their love

There's nothing "Marxist" about social democrats or democratic socialists or whatever you want to call them. They are the most popular party in the world, aren't they?

Quote
Is Debt Collector & Owner Ryon Alan Gambill on drugs or is he just stupid?

Courthouse records show you have been sued numerous times, entered default judgments and are on some payment plans for FDCPA violations. You are shooting off your mouth about Bud Hibbs on various boards and how you intend on suing me. Is this the way to handle your problems Ryon? (your mouth or your ego?)

Ryon; the truth is you are a LIAR and a con man. The complaints I receive and attorneys who have contacted me state that you call and threaten people with arrest, seizure and garnishment on debts. You get sued, take judgments, yet don?t pay them. That classifies you as a DEADBEAT DEBT COLLECTOR!

Comments from attorneys include:

"I recently filed a lawsuit against Marauder Corporation (d/b/a Nationwide Capital Recovery and/or Collection Professional Services) based on a claim they threatened to have my clients arrested if they did not immediately pay a bill."

"This is one of the worst debt collectors in the country. Also, they have several very large judgments against them, but their attorney told me recently that the d/c is trying to resolve these "misunderstandings" and satisfy them."

"Often this d/c allows default judgments, and I think there are several against Marauder and/or Ryon Alan Gambill, its principal owner and the main harasser."
Can you say YUK!! Let's start with your REAL name: 'Ryon Alan Gambill'

�Having just recently starting dealing with you, it is impossible to determine which is larger; Your Ego or Your Mouth!

After receiving a frantic email from a woman claiming you had called and threatened her with arrest for a debt, I attempted to contact you to learn who and what you are. Your response was to lie, misrepresent yourself, and then go out on the web and spread lies and falsehoods about me. Ryon, you already have a TERRIBLE reputation for lies, illegal debt collection practices and NOT paying your own bills.

�You have been sued numerous times for illegal debt collection practices and still lie and break the law. Are you REALLY that stupid? Your ravings about suing me have been received Ryon, I?m not impressed or intimidated. We will happily give you the spotlight you seem to crave by publishing whatever transpires and whatever we find on you.

CONSUMERS: This is about as bad as debt collectors get. Ryon is the typical slimy debt collector who will lie, intimidate, threaten coerce, perhaps even stoops to extortion in his attempt to separate you from your money. He is dangerous and should be stopped. If you are contacted by Marauder Corporation/CPS/National Capital Recovery, get in touch with me for assistance and referral to a local consumer law professional. Report Ryon to the California American Collectors Association at:� cac@calcollectors.net� they are interested in any complaints you may have on him and his illegal debt collection practices.

�I will publish any depositions taken of Ryon Alan Gambill so consumers and clients he represents can see what he really is. If you know the names of any client he represents, please let me know. This is an accident that has already happened, stay FAR away from him and his phony collection business.

http://debtorboards.com/smf/index.php?topic=712.0

It seems that Gambill is willing to gamBLE with getting another judgment he cannot pay against him!� This individual has actually filed against Bud Hibbs in Federal Court, Northern District of TX.� This is the case number:� 4:06-cv-00418-A., Ryan Gambill, Marauder Corporation v. Richard A. Hibbs a.k.a. Bud Hibbs, Susan Hibbs,� Brian Saltzberg d/b/a ProComp Tec .

I have looked at the PACER complaint:� Basically, it comes down to Gambill trying to argue that Bud Hibbs has no right to criticize him because Hibbs happens to operate a counseling and information service for debtors that refuses to portray him in a flattering light.� On top of this, he wants anything that uses the name "Maruader Corporation" to be taken down from the Bud Hibbs site as a trademark violation, including any archives and or search engine links.

Take a look at the complaint and motions for injunction so far and note the First Amendment implications, as well as the distortion of the application of trademark law. One of the arguments uses a case in support that really is about the use of a trademarked name in a domain name not owned by the trademark holder, not the use of the name in a critical essay or opinion column, which is what Hibbs is doing.

The argument about Gambill being a private person is faulty, too:� Gambill, by running a business, is making himself at least a quasi-public figure...he has to to promote the business and make a profit.� The fact that the business uses the WEB as a major source of self-promotion and the actual business operation should mitigate any alleged damages because Mr. Gambill should be able to post on his site a defense to any and all things that Hibbs does on his!� (This is why it is� apparently difficult to successfully sue a blog for defamation, since it is easy for the aggrieved to set up one of their own and use that to defend their position.� It would be just as easy to do here.)

If Gambill does win the case, then it would set a precedent in which nobody can criticize any corporation, and even use the words in the name in any text without permission if the person happens to run a business which says anything critical of the trademark holders. This would be an abrogation of Hibbs Constitutional rights of free speech...which, in turn, could shut us all down if anyone decides suing us would be a nice gesture. In turn, this would end up suppressing the information--not always favorable to the "otherside"--we need to find and pass on, leaving us defenseless.

I remember Christine and thinking she was brilliant, now she just a sociopath or something. Seriously. She needs to get laid or lobotomized or something.

I came upon that link by accident while searching for that Keener guy since I found out he lives near me.

Slamabama over at CI owns Maurauder Corp near me and mentioned Kenner and attorney Robert Stempler being buddies who sue debt collectors as well websites like AoC so they will be the only knowledgeable credit people or some conspiracy theory like that.

I actually spoke with Stempler once and he was giving me all kinds of "People on those websites all make claims that aren't true, they all got sued and lost and lie about it on the interntt...blah blah blah." He basically warned me to stay away from sites like this, so I never called him back and handled everything myself.

I followed Flying here becuase I like his style, and his method really did work the best for me. Writing scary certified mail just doesn't work like it did a few years ago.

I'd hoped the other big guns like Tower and Xan would find their way here also, but I imagine they are burnt out. ANyone know where they went?

Note what I bolded: Keener is probably involved through Stempler! And, this idiot is stupid enough to hire an attorney whose sole purpose is to sue every site that deals with credit and collections, including those on the collection side? A person who could very well become a turncoat on HIM, even if he wins (and wins right up through the US Supreme Court) is nobody to trust.

This guy is insane!

I'd almost forgotten about all of this.&#65533; That Maurauder guy lives near me, too.&#65533; The dropbox he uses as his address is right down the street from my work.

It makes me feel wierd, knowing the forces of evil are so very close.

I hope Keener never pulls me over for anthing, I'm lible to get shot while fussing at him for causing so much trouble for AoC.

Stempler was uppity and had a huge ego.&#65533; He retuned my call on a Sunday evening from his resort at lake Big Bear (the area code was from there, anyway).&#65533; As soon as I said the word "internet" he had a fit about the people on these sites who make false claims of succesfully fighting off CA's, which fool people ino thinking they can defend themselves.

I was only taking about looking at court cases on the internet.

Well, can't find anything listed at that time. I would have to guess Cairo or North Korea since they are set up for transmission on 9990 kHz. I listened yesterday until about 0300 and did not hear anything on the frequency. I will listen later today.

"Brown's mother had filed numerous complaints with the Jefferson County Sheriff's office about Eric Harris, believing him to be dangerous. The website was filled with death threats towards Brooks, and Dylan knew that if Brooks had the address, it would make its way to his mother and possibly result in problems for Harris. Indeed, Brooks Brown's parents contacted the Jefferson County Sheriff's Office, and investigator Michael Guerra was notified of the site"

Looks like someone missed a bunch of warning signs. These kids were dangerous long before this occured. Intervention would have helped more than gun control. Stopping the criminal while he is still a potential criminal works a lot better, because someone who is determined will do it.

"With instructions from the Internet, they also built 99 improvised explosive devices of various designs and sizes. They also sawed the barrels and butts off their shotguns in order to make them easier to conceal.[4] The two perpetrators committed numerous felony violations of state and federal law, including the National Firearms Act and the Gun Control Act of 1968, even before the massacre began."

Sounds like we should also control information from the net. You won't see this thing in China, for instance.

"At Columbine, the pair met near Harris's car and armed two 20 pound (9 kg) propane bombs before entering the cafeteria a few minutes before the A lunch shift began and placed the duffel bags carrying the bombs inside. Each bomb was set to explode at approximately 11:17 a.m."

Propane control was clearly needed. Oh, a 20 lb propane tank is about 18 inches in diameter and 28 or so inches tall and weighs about 30 pounds total (the tank is quite stout). How they were missed is beyone me. Oh, and they give a pretty solid "thunk" when they are set down on a solid surface.

So, gun control isn't the real issue. Identifying and treating the mental disorders would have prevented the massacre.

I have not been trained to shoot to kill. That can be construed as voluntary mansllaughter. I shoot to stop. If it kills, so be it. As long as it stops the attack.

Shooting to wound could be interpretted as saying that there might have been that there was a less than lethal means of stopping the attack. Which could be constrsued as assault & battery with a deadly weapon.

And you know the "To protect and serve" you see on most police cars in the US. That has been consitently ruled to be a slogan and not an

But you miss my point.

I'm not against gun ownership, but there are just too many available

Of course we have a police state. Have you checked the stats regarding prison populations?

The US has an epidemic of violence, period. Even if you eliminate all gun crime from the statistics, the US still ranks up there.

That aside, my hypothesis is that most gun crime is drug related.
Unfortunately for me, I have been unable to get the numbers to validate or disprove this. Ever year, my main sources of information for this, the Uniform Crime Stastistics and NIH mortality reports, seem to have less and less detail.

Let's connect some dots here. I believe KMPH did not go off the air for lack of revenue - rather, KMPH was taken off the air in order to repurpose its operating expenses to KTRB and keep that moneypit on the air. Realistically, how expensive was KMPH anyway? A small staff, a 5kW xmtr, a single xmtr site with PG&E power - that cannot be much of a drain on the Pappas company. However, consider KTRB - a 50kW station with two xmtr sites, expensive nighttime operation where propane has be trucked to xmtr site weekly. KTRB is the station that's killing Pappas financially, not KMPH. KTRB is kept on the air in hopes that a greater fool will come along and relieve the Pappas' of the burden of operating that turkey. Good luck.

I don't have any special inside info. What I've given you is plain common sense and analysis. Free.

Guns are too easy to obtain, and there are too many of them. Look at the school shootings, and we have had several.

As the conservatives gain influence and power, I would expect the stats to fade into obscurity, and the lies we hear from them are simply unbelievable.

A shooting happened this morning in the Walmart parking lot at Greenway Drive and Highway 18.A guy was shot in the chest, police are looking for two men who got way in a red Pontiac car.That is the same Walmart store (a mile and a half South of doggy's couch) I go to to do my food shopping.

Last night, another shooting happened in Jackson, somebody was killed in that shooting.

Hey, there's an idea - send that 909 over to Radio Labs for repair.
They charge $40 +shipping for basic repair. Should be less than $150 - they only charge $109 for the super 909 mods.

Actually, firearms don't cause deaths any more than cast iron skillets do. It's all in how they're used. It is true that some population groups are more prone to violence, though. That's the main reason why the US murder rates are many times higher than in Europe and Japan. See http://nationalvanguard.org/2010/10/racial-violence-in-america/for the statistics.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

That really has nothing to do with it. Availability is not causal.
School violence does happen, but it are very rare. Very widely publicized, but rare.

As a conservative, I want that information published. I believe it would reveal some very disquieting truths about where violence exists, its causes, and what segments of the population are most at risk.

Give you a hint about that. Poverty, Violence, and drugs go hand in hand.

This should have read:
VegasNightOwl - what type of radio are you using?

But thanks for the list Dave. Pretty impressive. I use a ProIII for amateur work and the Perseus for portable / fixed HF and MW Dxing.

Absolutely. I can't remember the last time the local media here, or national, for that matter, ever did a glamor piece on dad with his gun saving the family ... or wife with a gun saving hers.

Indeed, before they stopped reporting on car thefts, purse snatchings, muggings, etc. the column(s) had become large enough to be embarrassing (200 car thefts a month, when they were still counting) ... now, since they just report when it happens to the rich and famous, and sparingly, people feel a lot better!

We have a typhoon heading right at us (just north of us) we are on the good side right now. If it should turns a little south then we will be on the bad side.
We will be fine, we live in the middle of the island so we won't get all the wind. The only flooding we should get is from rain run off. Our rooms are up a foot from the rest of the house and so far in five years we have not had water in the house.
We may lose AC and it could be for days so we will start eating everything in the refrig. Today. I maybe off line for a few days but we should be OK.
This one is all ready a Super Typhoon.

Liberty Net: October 9, 2010

http://3950.net/2010/10/liberty-net-october-9-2010/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

LOW STATIC LEVELS and rising sunspot numbers created a 75 meter band that was a real pleasure to listen to during this weekï¿½s Liberty Net, and the free flow of uncensored ideas and information was an excellent stimulant for those still capable of independent thought.

Here are a few topics covered this time on the most exciting net on the amateur radio bands, the Liberty Net, on the air since 1974:

ï¿½ Not only in terms of gold, but also in terms of the Swiss franc, the dollar is near long-term lows and seems to experience abrupt drops several times every day. (8 minutes)

ï¿½ The Republicans are essentially worthless, but it remains true that virtually everything the regime in Washington does is illegal ï¿½ so it would be a good thing if Congress becomes deadlocked and paralyzed by partisanship after November. (42 minutes)

ï¿½ Why is it that the Amish ï¿½ who donï¿½t use vaccines and donï¿½t consume processed foods ï¿½ have such low rates of autism and Alzheimerï¿½s? (58 minutes)

ï¿½ When the national chairman of the New Black Panther Party, Malik Zulu Shabazz, who has called for White people to be killed, was discovered on the White House guest list, the administration strained everyoneï¿½s credulity by claiming that it was _another_ Malik Zulu Shabazz who visited. (2 hours 11 minutes)

ï¿½ Are government employees with fat pensions at the alphabet agencies like the NSA and FBI, along with private Jewish spy groups like the SPLC and ADL, taking notes and taking names of Liberty Net participants for possible future persecution? Probably. But it doesnï¿½t stop the net, because participants know that we must speak out to regain our self-determination and freedom. (2 hours 29 minutes)

ï¿½ We should support the New Hampshire father who had his baby snatched away by the government because he dared to express a political opinion on the controversial ï¿½Oath Keepersï¿½ Web site, a site which encourages public servants to keep their oaths by challenging unconstitutional orders ï¿½ and we should read patriotic alternative news sources to find out about other cases of the increasing political repression in this country. (2 hours 43 minutes)

ï¿½ Are a massive number of home foreclosures ï¿½ some of them for non-payment of taxes ï¿½ being engineered in order to separate as many of us as possible from our relatively secure and defensible home bases, and make us dependent on the regime for housing and ï¿½securityï¿½? (2 hours 59 minutes)

For a full Liberty Net immersion experience, in addition to listening over the air, log on Saturday evenings beginning at 10PM Eastern for live audio feeds of the Net (sometimes from several stations simultaneously) and live text chat too at stickam.com/thelibertynet via N2SAG.

All our thanks go to N2SAG and N2IRJ and especially W1WCR for their hard work which makes the Liberty Net and its Internet adjuncts possible. Remember, you can download the Net right here at http://3950.net and listen in your gym or on your way to work or anywhere you choose.

forget we wanna' know, ya' know?

Damn fools. Those those idiots out of media and make the b*st*rd answer

I'm going to get a Perseus someday to use as a panadapter for the

I essentially agree, but there is a problem, quite outside the main problem (that violence-prone populations breed more than relatively peaceful ones).

It is that, as a society, we have almost completely disconnected crime from illegality.

There are many things which are truly crimes (such as the promotion of miscegenation, or the creation of money by accounting-book entry and the demanding of interest from us on such counterfeit funds) that are perfectly "legal" according to the regime in Washington.

And there are many other things that are not crimes at all (such as consuming whatever medicines or herbs you desire, or refusing to allow an illegitimate regime to steal your family's wealth to give it to the bankers or the worthless underclass or foreign governments) -- and yet they are "illegal" according to words written on the regime's libraries-full of "law" books that no one person could read in his entire lifetime even if he did nothing else.

In short, in the free-range insane asylum between the 49th parallel and the Rio Grande, horrible crimes are often perfectly legal, and innocent, moral, and truly good acts often land you in federal prison.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

Candidates Keeping Pro-Amnesty Comments To Themselves (pro-enforcement candidates much more vocal this season)

Discouraged Pro-Amnesty Groups Turn Their Focus To Local Level

The Pro-Amnesty, Open-Border groups are trying a new approach in spreading their message according to a new article published by USA Today. Instead of focusing only on Congress, they are now focusing on local communities by helping illegal aliens assimilate into society and lobbying local law enforcement to avoid treatment that they view as harsh.

Los Angeles County to Extend 287(g) Program

The Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors voted to extend its 287(g) agreement with the federal government despite protests from pro-illegal alien supporters. The 287(g) program trains local law enforcement officials to help identify criminal illegal aliens and turn them over to federal immigration agents.

Yeah, kinda' like "Bizarro World", from the old Superman Comics ... good summation; I see it!

In having met some of these small time crooks/politicians/etc., I don't hold drugs as being responsible for their insane behaviors (although, in some cases it maybe, or, at least, may help.) It appears to be sheer greed, corruption and human fallibility! In extreme cases, sociopathic tendencies/drives?

And, in the final analysis, you must ask yourself, "Is it them, or is it us?" As, it looks like those we once locked into prisons and mental institutions, we now elect to public office! Go figure!

Bullshit! It was hot for Reagan in '86 and he decided to give away America like Bush did - amnesty. Repugs never follow thru. They think all they have to do is make an issue of something that's not even important, then make a cause out of it to cover their crimes.
Jobs were the real issue and Bush outsourced them all to China and India, with the help of Nutmeg Whitman and Carly Fraudrina..
Illegals are unimportant.

I don't recall that being true of my grandmother, but perhaps you know better.

But if you're talking about groups (Horrors! -- we're not supposed to do that!), there's some truth in what you say. After all, Sherman's March to the Sea, a war crime of war crimes, was done by White people.

But it still remains true that some races are far more violent than others:

Listened until 0500UT but nothing showed up on 9990kHz, at least nothing here. Heard a pretty good station from India with a music program earlier down the band - around 9910kHz. So signals from the far east are propagating around that that time.

Try to listen to a few foreign broadcasts with known (scheduled) languages. At least if you can tell the difference between an oriental and an arabic language, you will be able to pin down the location of many broadcasts.

My first solid state desktop receiver was a Kenwood R-600.

Thanks, Roy, for publicizing those links, I used tp post frequently on the Daily Log Book, but gave up after vandals started making nonsense postings. I think the Logbook deserves support and also want to encourage folks to post either DX or program info.

Good work, Roy!

The Liberal's Path to Socialism
Pt.1 http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=fPyoEbU_wc4
Pt.2 http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Dvuxr7v4xzk

"Just as the Left was drawn to the communist killing machines of Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Pol Pot, and Castro, so too it is now attracted to radical Islam."

"The contempt that German Hitlerytes had for "Bolshevism" or "marxist Jews" generally should also not mislead us in assessing the similarity between National Socialism and Communism. Leftist sects are very prone to rivalry, dissension, schism and hatred of one-another. One has only to think of the Bolsheviks versus the Mensheviks, Stalin versus Trotsky, China versus the Soviet Union etc. Similarity does not preclude rivalry. Hitler and Stalin were literally brothers in arms BEFORE they became rivals. That socialist brothers sometimes fall out should not prevent us from noting the brotherhood concerned."

"The fundamental dogma of all brands of socialism and communism is that the market economy or capitalism is a system that hurts the vital interests of the immense majority of people for the sole benefit of a small minority of rugged individualists. It condemns the masses to progressing impoverishment. It brings about misery, slavery, oppression, degradation and exploitation of the working men, while it enriches a class of idle and useless parasites."

"This doctrine was not the work of Karl Marx. It had been developed long before Marx entered the scene. Its most successful propagators were not the Marxian authors, but such men as Carlyle and Ruskin, the British Fabians, the German professors and the American Institutionalists. And it is a very significant fact that the correctness of this dogma was contested only by a few economists who were very soon silenced and barred from access to the universities, the press, the leadership of political parties and, first of all, public office. Public opinion by and large accepted the condemnation of capitalism without any reservation."

"The term 'planning' is mostly used as a synonym for socialism, communism, and authoritarian and totalitarian economic management. Sometimes only the German pattern of socialism-Zwangswirtschaft-is called planning, while the term socialism proper is reserved for the Russian pattern of outright socialization and bureaucratic operation of all plants, shops, and farms. At any rate, planning in this sense means all-around planning by the government and enforcement of these plans by the police power. Planning in this sense means full government control of business. It is the antithesis of free enterprise, private initiative, private ownership of the means of production, market economy, and the price system. Planning and capitalism are utterly incompatible. Within a system of planning production is conducted according to the government's orders, not according to the plans of capitalists and entrepreneurs eager to profit by best filling the wants of the consumers.

"But the term planning is also used in a second sense. Lord Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Professor Hansen, and many other eminent men assert that they do not want to substitute totalitarian slavery for freedom. They declare that they are planing for a free society. They recommend a third system, which, as they say, is as far from socialism as it is from capitalism, which, as a third solution of the problem of society's economic organization, stands midway between the two other systems, and while retaining the advantages of both, avoids the disadvantages inherent in each.

"These self-styled progressives are certainly mistaken when they pretend that their proposals are new and unheard of. The idea of this third solution is very old indeed, and the French have long since baptized it with a pertinent name; they call it interventionism.
Hardly anybody can doubt that history will link the idea of social security, more closely than with the American New Deal and with Sir William Beveridge, with the memory of Bismarck whom our fathers did not precisely describe as a liberal. All the essential ideas of present-day interventionist progressivism were neatly expounded by the supreme brain-trusters of imperial Germany, Professors Schmoller and Wagner, who at the same time urged their Kaiser to invade and to conquer the Americas. Far be it from me to condemn any idea only on account of its not being new. But as the progressives slander all their opponents as old-fashioned, orthodox, and reactionary, it is expedient to observe that it would be more appropriate to speak of the clash of two orthodoxies; the Bismarck orthodoxy versus the Jefferson orthodoxy.

The following is from The World Book Encyclopedia, 1947 edition:
The chief characteristics of Fascism are as follows:

THE CULTIVATION OF IGNORANCE

Fascism, like all forms of government, rests firmly on the sincere consent of a large part of the population... To maintain this consent, the Fascist leadership must cut off the people from any information which might cause them to doubt the complete correctness of the fixed Fascist principles... All forms of communication are carefully censored, so that the public will receive only those facts that the dictators want known... Travel to other countries must be controlled, and freedom of speech and assembly must be rigorously suppressed...

http://www.americanthinker.com/blog/2010/10/arrest_warrant_filed_for_rahms.html http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=sce0TLA5UYE
http://bigjournalism.com/dloesch/2010/10/13/exclusive-cbs2-reporter-threatens-journalist-over-rahm-questioning/

SUPPRESSION OF LABOR AND INDUSTRY

Fascism in Italy and Germany at first won the support of the wealthy classes, both landed and industrial... These people saw in Fascism a protection against the demands of farmers and other workers... Both regimes at first upheld the rights of private property... They subjected the working classes to a rigorous discipline... As soon as they were firmly established, the dictators began to limit profit, impose capital levies, and regulate business in great detail...

Employment Rates under Liberal Fascism
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=9ssIhiD8kKM

.....sound
familiar?.....

THE POLICE STATE

Fascism depends upon the police to crush all opposition or dissent. Secret police spy on the whole population, and any casual remark against the regime leads to swift and severe punishment... Opposition parties are dissolved. Intellectual, athletic and recreational organizations are usually brought under the control of the Fascist authority... The ruthlessness of the police gradually becomes less noticeable... This is because within a year or so after a Fascist government takes power, vigorous opponents of the regime have either left the country, been killed or jailed...

Fascism is highly nationalistic... It tries to identify its principles with the country, so that disagreement will look like treason... Some other country, or some group within the country, is chosen to serve as the "enemy" and made to appear as the cause of all evils or misfortunes... For example, the Nazis in Germany represented their movement first as a crusade against the Jews, then as a fight against Communism and later as a struggle against the "attacks" from whatever neighboring country they wished to subdue or occupy... Extreme nationalism often becomes a kind of racial fanaticism... Sometimes it combines racial and religious bigotry...

When you hear the Liberal Fascist propaganda that THEY are the true patriots then you know the time is near. Look for it from the socialist Labor Unions such as the SEIU!
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6535

MILITARISM

Fascism maintains among the people a permanently warlike frame of mind... Every citizen feels that he is mobilized against enemies of the regime from within, and against possible foreign foes... The dictator usually comes to power during a period of economic crisis or depression... He relieves the depression partly by employing many people in the making of armaments... To justify this procedure, he must convince the people that the country is threatened, and must point toward some of the enemies against whom the armaments may be needed...

Listen to 0baMa0's rhetoric and his fascistic support from the Liberals

Here are the Three (3) Phases of Liberal Decay into Fascism:

1. Liberalism (Well Meaning, Nice Sounding,
"Do-Gooder" Policies Always Doomed to Fail)

2. Liberal-Progressivism (The Drive for Social Improvement through Change and Promising Hope;
More Draconian Liberal Polices are Implemented to Transform The People into a New Society that Is Guided by 'The Party') The Party Elite Have Complete Power and Rule Un-Checked.

3. Liberal-Fascism (The Rise of the Party Leader over 'The Party' Ensuring the Unity and Uniformaty of 'The Party' and Enforcing The Will of 'The Party' Over the People.) The Party Leader will Cleanse
'The Party' of All those Who Are NOT of 'The Party'; and 'The Party' Will Cleanse the People of All Those Who Do NOT Support 'The Party' and The Party Leader
The Party Leader Now Has Complete and Total Power and Rules by the Force of His Iron Will.

- But it still remains true that some races
- are far more violent than others:

? Races ?

Or more correctly Ethnic {Tribal} Groups that through Centuries & Millennium of close Ethnic Inner Breeding have developed their Fearsome Fighter Genes {DNA} within a Warrior Culture; with the Smarter and Stronger Warriors surviving and the dumber and weaker dying-off before they could breed-once-again . . .

The "Cossacks" made-up such an Ethnic Groups of Fearsome Fighters from a Warrior Tribal Culture.
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Cossacks

The British themselves look for these so-called "Martial Races" {Ethnic 'Tribal' Groups} to exploit and use in the building of their World Empire.
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Martial_Races

The "Gurkha"s also made-up an Ethnic Group of Fearsome Fighters from a Warrior Tribal Culture.

My property sits in the cornner of all three counties I so get three votes.

More like an official capital punishment to deter the potential trigger-happy-hold-up- characters. White collar crime is different ,of course. We give the criminal bankers any amount they need (immediately as soon as they plead poverty !) to carry on their destructive business ... And that's the way it is.

We have to remember that inner Asia has produced the following men:
Atilla, Genghis-khan, Tamerlane and many,many other,less significant bloodthirsty megalomaniacs . Ancient Rome, Persia, Armenia, Bagdad,China,Russia ,India collapsed under their military might. Go figure.

The cossacks are not an ethnic group or tribe. However, they had to adapt themself to the general lawlessness and conditions of the wild steppes. Tzar Nicolas II was the last monarch in Russia whose personal security was entrusted to them. They were the most loyal guard of HIM . But again,the cossacks spoke many different languages and some of them were Moslems !

Language of the program may lead to wrong conclusions. Interval signal or music content (sometimes) should be a better indicator. Most broadcasters use the usual popular and most prevalent languages,but not always. Anyways, 9990KHz used to be one of R. Cairo's frequencies in the past. I think.

I am talking about usiing one of the station/freq/language lists on the internet like: http://www.hfskeds.com/skeds/
I use the combined Excel spreadsheet.

You are right that Cairo uses this frequency but North Korea does too.
Neither of them are scheduled to be on the air at 0445UT but if they were the language might tell you which station you are listening to.
If you are lucky and hear an interval signal or national anthem - for that you can check: http://www.intervalsignals.net/

Those web sites should help. Listened again last night but nothing on 9990kHz at that time. Good DXing.

'Special Dave',

Sort of like the analogy of a friend of mine 'Carl' who worked for the DoN {DOD} and said that he was not a Killer-by-proxy -but- The Farmer who grew the Wheat; that make the Bread; that the Soldier Ate was a Killer-by-proxy.

Conclusion : All Americans Are Killers-by-proxy unless they moved to Canada in the 1960s . . .

Even Canada supplied the USA with 'essential' War Materials to aid in Killing of the Peoples of 'other' Nations around the World : And Today Canada is a Willing and Contibuting Partner in many of the USA's Wars in so-called 'Zones of Conflict'. : A lot of Scotch and Irish Ancestral Warriors {Marital Peoples} live in Canada.

i proudly support our troops ~ RHF

I found this on the web yesterday. TAKE Warning!

Older men scammed

Women often receive warnings about protecting themselves at the mall and in dark parking lots, etc. This is the first warning I have seen for men. I wanted to pass it on in case you haven't heard about it.

A 'heads up' for those men who may be regular customers at Lowe's, Home Depot, Costco, or even Wal-Mart. This one caught me totally by surprise. Over the last month I became a victim of a clever scam while out shopping..

Simply going out to get supplies has turned out to be quite traumatic. Don't be naive enough to think it couldn't happen to you or your friends.

Here's how the scam works:

Two nice-looking, college-aged girls will come over to your car or truck as you are packing your purchases into your vehicle. They both start wiping your windshield with a rag and Windex, with their breasts almost falling out of their skimpy T-shirts. (It's impossible not to look). When you thank them and offer them a tip, they say 'No' but instead ask for a ride to McDonald's.

You agree and they climb into the vehicle. On the way, they start undressing. Then one of them starts crawling all over you, while the other one steals your wallet.

I had my wallet stolen Mar. 4th, 9th, 10th, twice on the 15th, 17th, 20th, 24th, & 29th. Also Apr. 1st & 4th, twice on the 8th, 16th, 23rd, 26th & 27th, and very likely again this upcoming weekend.

So tell your friends to be careful. What a horrible way to take advantage of us older men. Warn your friends to be vigilant.

Wal-Mart has wallets on sale for $2.99 each. I found even cheaper ones for $.99 at the dollar store and bought them out in three of their stores.

Also, you never get to eat at McDonald's. I've already lost 11 pounds just running back and forth from Lowe's, to Home Depot, to Costco, Etc.

So please, send this on to all the older men that you know and warn them to be on the lookout for this scam. (The best times are just before lunch and around 4:30 in the afternoon.)

You can't be too careful guys. ;-) almost comical! Even examples of teabaggers and how they were convinced back then. Funny how this features Palin's home state as an example of Teabaggers comical?

To which teabagger might you be referring?

- the expert in International relations because she can see Russia?

- the one who wants to outlaw unemployment (even though his wife was taking it)?

- the gay basher whose son owns/manages a gay bar?

- the witch?

- the Nazi?

Do you mean one of those comical teabaggers?

P.S. Forget comical...even though I believe we need a third party, it's downright scary that people are seriously considering -these- clowns and lunatics.

(Apologies to OP: Yes, I realize I took your original post out of context, but it was just too good to pass up).

Charles Gibson: What insight into Russian actions, particularly in the last couple of weeks does the proximity of this state give you?

Sarah Palin: They're our next door neighbors, and you can actually see Russia from land, here in Alaska.

Not exactly Kissinger. But hardly the stuff of which such derision is made.

The actual 'I can see it from my house' line came in an exchange about an island within Alaskan territorial waters.

So did the "you can actually see Russia from land, here in Alaska." The islands are Big and Little Diomedes. One is US the other is Russian.

First, I never said Palin could see Russia from her living room.

Please refer to numerous search engine hits and specifically the video recordings of (the real) Sarah Palin doing interviews with (the real) Katie Couric and (the real) Charlie Gibson. Without posting the entire text of each interview, one snippet will point you in the right direction:

Palin said that "it [her nearness to Russia] enhances my [Palin's] foreign policy experience". Maybe a comprehension issue on your part, but that clearly illustrates my point.

> Also what teabaggers are you talking about...

What teabaggers am I talking about? What planet have you been visiting????

1) You guessed the first one as Palin. Congratulations!

2) The second teabagger is the 5 o'clock shadow guy in Alaska...you know, the one who hired his wife, then laid her off and then had her apply for unemployment -- and now wants to make unemployment payments illegal.

3) The gay basher whose son is involved with a gay bar is Palladino, New York gubernatorial candidate.

4) The witch is the congressional candidate Dingbat in Delaware.

5) The nazi is the guy running for the 5th Congressional District in Ohio.

THOSE teabaggers, a collection of clowns and lunatics, one and all.

Yes - Most of the derision made about this exchange comes from the Saturday Night Live sketch - although I disagree that proximity of a single state to another nation necessarily gives anybody in that state a leg-up on international issues.

Here is their philosophy before you, here is the philosophy of the puppet masters, here is where the intelligent find their battle: ï¿½We must go forward cautiously and consolidate each acquired position, because already the inferior social stratum of society is giving unceasing signs of agitation.

ï¿½Therefore, prudence dictates to us a line of conduct that seems to give in to the will of the people, until the execution of our plans be well-enough established for us to be able to declare our intentions without having to fear any organized resistance.

ï¿½Our confidence men shall have to closely watch the Farmers Alliance and the Knights of Work, and take steps immediately, either to control both associations in accordance with our interests, or to break them.

ï¿½Our men will have to attend the Convention that will be held in Omaha on the 4th of July, and be in charge of all activities. Otherwise, this Convention could muster such an antagonism to our plans that we would have to resort to force to overcome it.

Now, at the present time, using violence would be premature. We are not yet ready to confront such an assault. Money must first of all seek maximum protection in schemes and in legislation.

ï¿½Let us make use of the courts. Let us go forward as fast as possible at perceiving debts, at foreclosing (depriving of recourse to justice when a certain time limit has been transgressed) on debentures and mortgages.

ï¿½When, through the law's intervention, the common people shall have lost their homes, they will be more easy to control and more easy to govern, and they shall not be able to resist the strong hand of the Government acting in accordance with the orders of the central power of imperial wealth, under the control of the leaders of finance.

ï¿½Our top leaders are perfectly aware of the truth. They are presently working at establishing an imperialism of the capital to rule the world. But while they are implementing this plan, they must keep the people busy with political antagonisms.

ï¿½We'll therefore speed up the question of reform in the custom rates by the political organization called the Democratic Party; and we'll put the spotlight on the question of protection and of the reciprocity by the Republican Party.

ï¿½By dividing the electorate this way, we'll be able to have them spend their energies at struggling amongst themselves on questions that, for us, have no importance whatsoever, and on which we only touch upon as instructors of the common flock.

ï¿½It is thus that, through discreet acts, we can maintain what was so generously projected and executed with such a remarkable success.ï¿½ -- United States Bankers' Magazine in 1892.

JS,
There should be NO Jury .
There should be NO Trial .
There should be NO Charge .
There should be NO Crime .
IT WAS SELF-DEFENSE [.]

We need an Initiative in the State of California
"The Individual's Right to Self-Defense of Self, Family and Home"
http://www.sos.ca.gov/elections/ballot-measures/how-to-qualify-an-initiative.htm

* Criminal comes in your Home : It's Self-Defense and No Criminal Charges can be brought by the DA.

* Criminal threatens Your-Self : It's Self-Defense and No Criminal Charges can be brought by the DA.

* Criminal threatens Your-Family : It's Self-Defense
and No Criminal Charges can be brought by the DA.

+ Plus NO Civil Actions Either by the Criminal, Their Family; Their Agents and/or 'others'.

CRIMINAL = Someone Committing a Criminal Act on Your Person {Self}; Your Family/Love-One/Neighbor; Home/Neighborhood; Business/Property.

Note - Self-Defense Is NOT A Crime as Defined-by-Law.

DA = Any and all Attorneys representing City/County/State.

-example-
Someone 'Smokes' in your House and You Shoot Them :
It's Self-Defense Against Poisonous Second-Hand Smoke.

yes it is that simple 'self-defense' is 'self-defense' and 'self-defense' is a basic "human-right" ~ RHF

On this we agree; however, Palin doesn't think so (see below)

Yes she did say it. Not from Saturday Night Live, not from her living room, but she [Palin] clearly stated on an ABC interview with Charlie Gibson and a CBS interview with Katie Couric that Alaska's proximity to Russia enhances her foreign-policy credentials.

This is a DIRECT QUOTE from Palin's interview with Couric on CBS News:

Couric: Well, explain to me why that [nearness to Russia] enhances your foreign-policy credentials.

Palin: Well, it certainly does, because our, our next-door neighbors are foreign countries, there in the state that I am the executive of.

What part of "Palin: Well, it certainly does...[enhance her foreign-policy credentials]" didn't you understand?

Roy,

Aside from the fact that you're nuts....

If such a law existed (minus the lunacy about shooting someone who smokes in your house.. that would never in a million years fly..), it would be too easy to abuse it, ie if you wanted to kill someone and get away with it, all you would have to do is make sure they were in your house under any pretense and blow them away.

Do you own a gun? Can you use it well? Do you know when to shoot someone, and when not to? Do you realize mentally ill people can and quite possibly will attack you for no apparent reason? Do you realize drugs can cause people to attack you for no apparent reason? Etc., etc.

If not: Do you own good stuff? Do you have children which can be molested? Are you worth any money?

If yes, YOU NEED A GUN! If all that is not taken care of, YOU NEED SOMEONE WITH A GUN TO BE AROUND TO PROTECT YOU!

Yeah, it's kinda' like that ... if the criminals go after them (non-gun owners), it will save us ammo ... sure, we will lose a few non-gun nuts ... but then, they are providing no factor of safety for themselves, their neighbors or their communities and nation ... all-in-all, not even a blip on the radar screen, most likely ...

Little Diomede (US) and Big Diomede (Ru) are slightly over 2 miles apart from each other. The Big Diomede does not have any permanent civilian population (they all were shipped back to Chukotka,Siberia) years ago. Sara Palin lived in Wasilla which is several hundred miles away.BTW, even the actressTina Fey would be a real problem for S.
Palin if she decided to run for a political position ! A lot more intellegence...

Maybe NASTY people will give other drivers a little respect... like people do at the shooting range.

Life's too short to have it shortened even more by being an asshole on

My wife is 4'11" tall. If she gets in a traffic argument with a ~6" guy and he threatening or invades her space (comes within distance of an attack), I told her, warn him as he approaches, if possible ... but don't do anything but rip out your .32 Beretta and empty the clip into his torso ... I'd even recommend that to a small guy!

You must have a stupid wife who would get into an argument with a ~6" guy.

A six inch guy?

Best to avoid roadside arguments. The ~6" guy might have a gun, too.

You must be fortunate to live in an area without "small-men-six-footers" who like to intimidate small women because the women have little piss-arse men who won't stand up for them. I keep having to come along and clean up the messes which cowards keep running away from--sometimes I wonder if we shouldn't just start kicking coward-arse to make them pitch in and help!

But anyway, I envy you. The area we live in, wife and I, and travel has a bunch of angry-morons who are always going around attempting to take other peoples property, etc. By the way, there are LARGE angry moron-women too ... as a side note, I find this strange, in our area this affliction seems to be racist in its' choice of morons too! By, how can that be, huh?

Stay where you are ... it happens a lot here in the central valley of california--the land of fruits and nuts!

JS

These girls sweat the small stuff; Just remember, when the special investigator for the county asks you, "Why did you shoot that man/woman/it?" Just reply, "Because I'd much rather be on trial for his shooting than him on trial for my murder!"

Now, some of these guys/gals can be real morons. Remember, people like me will sit your jury. We pay attention. We have seen the moral-ethic-standards decline in our cities and towns, and we are tired of it!

One more thing; Keep in mind, the people who argue the hardest against guns ARE THE CRIMINALS--some of them, perhaps most, just don't realize it. They think it their right to threaten and abuse others ... pisses 'em off when they realize they are eventually going to run into someone who stops them ...

Little Diomede (US) and Big Diomede (Ru) are slightly over 2 miles
apart from each other. The Big Diomede does not have any permanent civilian population (they all were shipped back to Chukotka,Siberia) years ago. Sara Palin lived in Wasilla which is several hundred miles away.BTW, even the actressTina Fey would be a real problem for S.
Palin if she decided to run for a political position ! A lot more intellegence...

Yet Tina Fey chose to be an actress instead of doing something more intelligent with her life
Can you see the disconnect ?

I 'ignored' it because I never said it. That was presumably said by Tina Fey on SNL...and that SNL show is used by the loony teabaggers to "prove" Palin herself never said she was an expert in foreign policy because Russia is close to Alaska.

Unfortunately for them, Palin DID say it, as proven by the videos of (the real) Palin giving interviews with (the real) Couric on CBS and (the real) Gibson on ABC.

Slice it and dice it any way you want, tap dance up a storm, but Palin DID SAY HER FOREIGN POLICY CREDENTIALS WERE ENHANCED BECAUSE RUSSIA IS CLOSE TO ALASKA (although she conveniently ignored the fact that she was NEVER even in that part of Alaska).

Yes she did.

But, she -also- said Alaska's nearness to Russia did indeed enhance her foreign-policy credentials.

Please review the CBS Couric and ABC Gibson videos to verify what I just stated above. They are widely available on the web.

BURR,

That's why most home {diy} mechanics have both a Set of Metrics and a Set of SAE Tools . . .

Just like having a common Slotted [Flat] Screwdriver and a Phillips [Pointed] Screwdriver; but please don't try to use a Phillips on a Reed-and-Prince Screw Head.

Plus there are Allen Wrenches [Hex-Key/Head] in both SAE and Metric Sizes too.

often in spite of all the 'metric' and 'sae' tools and

One of the hallmarks of a free society is the ability to choose, without compunction, one's job, or career.

That Tina Fey has chosen her own path is the very definition of a Constitutionally guaranteed right to Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness.

No disconnect involved. Her obligations stop when her bills are paid. Anything beyond that is her own business. And no one else's.

And she's a writer first. An actress much further down the list.

Ok...apparently, I need to dumb this down for you.

I only addressed the comment about seeing Russia from her house.
She never said that. And I included a transcript of the interview with Charles Gibson.

Any other statements she may have made were not within the purview of my post. And I did not discuss them. Because they're not worthy of comment.

A point which I never addressed.

But your pomposity, like your agenda, is noted.

That has never been an official designation for English wrenches.
Vaughan Aubuchon aside. In fact, he corrects himself at the bottom of Unfortunately, partially thanks to me, this got all confused. I apologize to all, and both Peter and Joe may be certain that I understand each person's position quite well.

Palin did say she was qualified in foreign affairs due to proximity of Alaska to Russia. I think most of us agree that we feel her perception here is "iffy."

She did not say that cutesy line about seeing Russia from her house.
Peter pointed this out originally, nothing more.

Carry on :-)

I am convinced that very few people of truly high quality run for office - they are all too well aware of their shortcomings, unlike politicians, who are stuffed full of themselves. It is no surprise to me that the smartest people in the USA are not attempting to run the nation.

MY father was Military intelligence in 1963 he was assigned to watch/listen to the Russians from Anchorage Alaska.... We had over the horizon radar as I recall. His NEXT assignment, after the Good Friday earth quake destroyed everything, was the Pentagon in D.C. we lived there for 3 years. HAARP was... I think the replacement or direction that his system morphed into.

[Looking at the other patents which built on the work of a Texas' physicist named Bernard Eastlund, it becomes clearer how the military intends to use the HAARP transmitter. It also makes governmental denials less believable. The military knows how it intends to use this technology, and has made it clear in their documents. The military has deliberately misled the public, through sophisticated word games, deceit and outright disinformation.

The military says the HAARP system could:

Give the military a tool to replace the electromagnetic pulse effect of atmospheric thermonuclear devices (still considered a viable option by the military through at least 1986)

Replace the huge Extremely Low Frequency (ELF) submarine communication system operating in Michigan and Wisconsin with a new and more compact technology

Be used to replace the over-the-horizon radar system that was once planned for the current location of HAARP, with a more flexible and accurate system

Provide a way to wipe out communications over an extremely large area, while keeping the military's own communications systems working

Provide a wide area earth-penetrating tomography which, if combined with the computing abilities of EMASS and Cray computers, would make it possible to verify many parts of nuclear nonproliferation and peace agreements

Be a tool for geophysical probing to find oil, gas and mineral deposits over a large area

Be used to detect incoming low-level planes and cruise missiles, making other technologies obsolete]

Well, you may feel they were "not worthy of comment", but there are some lunatic teabaggers in these NGs that would take your comment as vindication that (the real) Palin never said -anything- about her nearness to Russia enhancing her foreign policy qualifications. You only told half the story; I chose to use your post as a vehicle to squelch the knuckle-draggers and present the OTHER half of the story -- that (the real) Palin did indeed provably state that her nearness to Russia enhanced her foreign policy skills.

Cuhulin, you have that right. But, so was bush, and so did bush. The idiot puppet carrying out the plans of the shadow government is NOT our problem. We need to duck under the curtain and grab those pulling the strings--then, and only then, do things start improving from day one. There are 40+ states with concealed-carry Laws.
These states have the lowest crime rates int he nation and no problems with concealed-carry licensed people.
This is a fact and can be accessed easily if you care to do a little research and inform yourself.
Law abiding citizens carrying guns is not the problem. Criminals with no regard for the law are the problem.

JS,

Now What If - The News Media was NOT Liberal and Anti-Gun ?
-and- Instead Reported Accurately that the Home Owner {Victim} was Defenseless Against the Criminal
-because- The Victim Did Not Own A Gun and News Media
Also Reported on how many long Minutes it Took the Police to Respond long after the Criminal had left the Crime Scene :
In about One to Three Years the Number of Gun Owning Good American US Citizens would Double or Triple.
-and- The Crime Rate would go down.

YES - Prez Obama has been the Catalyst for Increased Gun Ownership by American US Citizens and Improved Public Safety for all those who believe in the Basic "Human-Right" of 'Self-Defense'.

Remember Prez Obama looks down on any American US Citizens that . . . "cling to guns or religion" . . .

I have never known a person, a couple, a family which after facing a crisis situation such as [coming home finding an intruder(s) in their home, waking up in the middle of the night and finding the intruder in their home/bedroom/garage/etc., being attacked and hospitalized, etc.] who has NOT WOKEN UP and purchased protection ... as much as we would like, the USA is not safe like when I was younger ... adapt or face great bodily damage and/or death ... it is simple--but it escape the simple! If I had been there with a 9mm in a shoulder holster I would have pulled the gun and pointed it at the "passer-[by]"; I would have stated a warning and reached for my cell phone to call 911 ... if the "passer-by" would have flinched in a manner I was uncomfortable with, I WOULD have planted half the clip in his torso ... now, this is the ideal scenario ... it might have played out a bit differently--depending on how the perpetrator forced me to react.

The outrageous attack on Arizona by President Barack Obama, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton and Attorney General Eric Holder continues. But this time, it's worse! The Obama Administration is encouraging other nations to join forces against Arizona. So far, the Ninth Circuit Court has allowed 11 foreign nations, including Mexico, to join the United States' lawsuit against Arizona.

Watching an American president prompt foreign leaders to attack a member of our republic makes me heartsick. But unfortunately, circumventing the people through the courtroom has always been one of the far left's most effective ways to undermine America. Liberal activist judges in California's Ninth Circuit and elsewhere have consistently overruled the people.

So we must act fast. The Freedom Center - specifically our legal wing, the Individual Rights Foundation - is standing with the state of Arizona, and I'm asking you to help us. Our legal team is working on briefs to support Arizona in its right to protect its borders and its citizens. It is truly a David vs. Goliath battle and we need your support.

Remember, we are not talking about legal immigration. America has long been the single greatest land of opportunity for millions of legal immigrants. But Arizona, like all of our border states, is being overrun by illegal immigrants. And with them has come a huge increase in crime - rampant drug trafficking - and enormous costs born by our taxpayers.

But the radical liberal agenda behind the Open Borders movement doesn't care about these burdens. In fact, it relishes the confusion, fear and economic mayhem the flood of illegal immigrants creates. Its leaders are cheering the interference of American affairs by foreign countries. And our president is actively promoting such disunity, crime and economic misery!

We cannot allow Arizona to fight this battle alone, because Arizona's fight is our fight. That's why I'm asking you to help the Freedom Center fight side by side with Arizona.

We must make certain Arizona has the best legal advice possible, including the legal team of the Individual Rights Foundation. Our staff understands the motivations and agenda of the radical left, so we are always able to provide counters to attacks others might not see coming.

Remember: we know the lengths the left will go to tear at the fabric of our society. A courtroom battle to prevent a state from protecting its citizens is classic. That's why I'm so proud of our legal team and its work on behalf of the state of Arizona. Please enable the Freedom Center to continue its work fighting on behalf of Arizona.

I think there are three strip joints in Jackson.I haven't ever been to any of them though, ergo those wimmins don't strip completely nude, however, once in a while one of them will strip nude and the cops come and throw her in the slammer.Last nudie joint I went to was Sammy's On The Island in Fort Walton/Destin,Florida, back around 1990 or 1991.They had a turn table built into the floor, there was a nude gal standing on that turn table, slowly going around and around.

He can't find any of them old milk crates,that 's why ! The new plastic ones are good to store old books and magazines and old junk.
Your neighbor needs to be told of his ignorance. Before it 's too late . A 1987 Chrysler 5 Avenue has a 318c.i. V8. Heavy old iron.

Just trolling around when I saw this message; thanks for the reception report. That was indeed an unusual day, as grey line enhancement was off the chart! We're GMT +2 here, so that was definitely at the end of the grey line. I had been on the radio about 2 hours at that point. What made the morning fun was that I'd copy two US hams going back and forth on the nice band conditions, then I'd call them back after their QSO ended. I was enjoying the mental image of coffee cups being knocked over. A couple of guys got pretty excited.

I was working the entire continental US at that time with no problem--not bad, since my powerhouse consists of a Yaesu FT-897D (barefoot, 30w) into a half length G5RV at about 30ft/10m. While I have it oriented so a lobe favors the US, on 40m I notice very little directionality. Truly a special day.

Best 73,

- - Only insofar as Asian sizes of cloth/shoes go.
- - A "meter" is unchangeable and equal 'exactly'
- - to the 1/10000000 distance from the North Pole
- - to the Equator. Established in France,1793.
- - During the Reign of Terror.

- Measured where?
- The earth is not a sphere you know.

'Special Dave' -let-it-rain/reign-knowledge-

The Metre {Meter} and the Metric System
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Metric_system
* 1 Metre was originally defined as 1/10,000,000 of the distance between the North Pole and Earth's Equator as measured along the Meridian passing through Paris.
* The Metre was later Re-Defined as the Length of a particular Bar of Platinum-Iridium Alloy
* The Metre is now Defined as the Distance that is Travelled by Light in an Absolute Vacuum during 1/299,792,458 of a Second.

'Special Dave' ? A meter is a measure of time ?

Nah a 'Metre' is the "Measured" Distance that is Traveled by Light in ~3 Nano-Seconds of Time.

'Special Dave' you would have to 'operate' in a Complete and Total Vacuum to do it; but you are used to that . . . ~ RHF

I could've sworn I said "autologgered", (to tweak those who think automated reception reports of 50 W signals near the noise floor are less valid than copying an interval signal on a 250 KW station manually). Do you use pskreporter?

I don't think I have ever seen so many lies in one wad. This sorry piece of pig swill is one whopper after another. It starts right out by claiming that something is going to happen with 401K's which the rightarded interpret as some sort of confiscation. Then we find that the proposal from a person outside of government was actually for propping up the 401K plans when disaster strikes the markets.

But then the lie fest continues with jewels like "The GRAs would be enforced by means of a mandatory savings tax equating to 5 per cent of an individual’s annual paycheck deposited to the GRA. Social Security and Medicare taxes would still be payable, employers would no longer would be able to write off their contributions and capital gains would be taxable year-on-year. In addition, workers could bequeath only half of their account balances to their heirs, unlike full balances from existing 401 (k) and IRA accounts."

All of this sounds rather bleak, but it also isn't real. We may see a 5% tax levied on income above some amount that would be paid into a Government Retirement Account. That is actually a pretty good idea if other adjustments end up refunding the tax to people with low incomes.

But all the other crap we see in this rag will not pass muster here in the USA. It is nothing but a BOOGERMAN story.

- A dog having a first and a last name is almost human !

Had an Uncle who had a little Dog who's name was
"Hey You !" . . . does that count as two names . . .
My Daddy had a Dog {Border Collie} name "Count" http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Border_Collie Not for his ability to 'Count' but because he had an almost all White Face with Black Ears and One Circle of Black around One Eye which looked like a Monocle "Eye-Patch" hence the name "Count" http://images2.fanpop.com/images/photos/5300000/Border-Collie-Wallpaper-dogs-5313780-800-600.jpg

Note this was the late 50s early 60s and 'pre' Hogan's Heroes otherwise we might have called him "Colonel Klink"

- - Measured where?
- - The earth is not a sphere you know.

- Back then the French Academy of Science didn't - have any tools/ technique available today. And, for
- some reason, France at the end of 18th century
- was slightly ahead of other European countries,
- in terms of applied science. Which may explain
- some of their unusual military successes under
- Bonaparte...

Napoleon Bonaparte was Trained and Served as an "Artillery Officer" in the French Military -so- Math and Science were part of his 'Skills Set' and Education.

Then -you- must be the Chief Airhead.

1) Couric asked a simple, reasonable question: "Does being close to Russia enhance your foreign policy skills?" (and Couric asked the question only because PALIN brought it up in the first place as one of her "qualifications").

2) Palin answered and said yes.

Please tell me what ever Couric being conservative or liberal had to do with the above.

Please stop spreading red herrings...

Winners?

Miller, the hypocrite in Alaska who wants to kill unemployment benefits, even though his wife was taking them?

Palladino, the gay basher whose son is connected with a gay bar?

The Delaware Dingbat witch?

The Ohio nazi?

And you call those people "winners"?

Yes indeed, not only do you have a strange definition of "winners", you seem to have proven once again that you -are- the Chief Airhead.

? Are You A "Preparer" ?
Believe In "Be Prepared" -aka- 'Being Prepared'

Heard a 'new' Name for so-called Survivalists :

Who are just planning to "Be Prepared" and have Asking an ignorant conservative a simple question that they still can't answer is the very definition of "liberal bias" in conservative circles. They believe that they are entitled to a free ride from the entire media and they go completely batshit on those rare occasions when they don't get one.

- 1) Couric asked a simple, reasonable question:
- "Does being close to Russia enhance your
- foreign policy skills?" (and Couric asked the
- question only because PALIN brought it up in
- the first place as one of her "qualifications").

Yeah - Katie Couric asked Sarah Palin a "Set-Up" Question -with- the underlying theme- Are You Really That Stupid ?

-wrt- do you still beat your husband . . .

- 2) Palin answered and said yes.

Sarah Palin gave her a :
Hey You {Couric} Dummy ! -reply-

- Please tell me what ever Couric being conservative
- or liberal had to do with the above.

Sigh.

This isn't a government plot, nor is it any sort of government plan.

The lady behind this is Teresa Ghilarducci, who is a Professor of Economics
(among other things, she's a very smart cookie). She has an entire process laid out for the GRA, along with how to make it work with SSA and so forth on her website.

http://www.nd.edu/~tghilard/

I don't agree with her, and don't think it would work, but it is hardly confiscation
and a long way from being a right-wing or left-wing plot.

I just love fools who can't even watch a video and give a proper and accurate summary of it. Why even waste schools on these idiots? I mean, the ridiculous schools we have now may be designed to fit them--i.e., "dummyied up."

They drill out small blocks and cylinders of steel. With a .22 or .25 cal bullet, you have a gun. A shotgun shell, pipe and a cap with a hole drilled in it for a firing pin, they have a gun ... the criminals will ALWAYS have some sort of gun ... only idiots will do without!

When the wife and I attend rallies in Texas and Arizona, and there are people everywhere with firearms on their sides, we feel safe ... hard to find a place in America where you can feel that safe today.

Teresa Ghilarducci contributed a presentation "The Recession and our Pensions" Democratic Socialists of America sponsored panel on "Democratic Socialist Responses to Stagnation, the Wall Street Collapse, and the World Economic Crisis" at Left Forum held at Pace University in New York City on April 19 2009.

Arguing for government job creation, Teresa Ghilarducci called the left to pressure the U.S. Congress;

"We depend upon the “left-leaning” Labor Department to get those messages out, and there’s just nothing about Hilda Solis – you heard it here – that is going to oppose or challenge Larry Summers or Tim Geithner, and that’s what we really need from the Labor Department.

"So, if we were going to talk about political action, I would focus it actually not on the Treasury or the presidency, but on the House of Representatives; not Barney Frank, but on the Labor Committee, where George Miller would pressure Reid and Pelosi, and I would really do everything I could to connect up with the leftists in the Labor Department. That’s where it has to happen. She doesn’t even have a chief economist yet. And that’s where we have to focus our attention.

At the Democratic Socialists of America National Political Committee Meeting of September 26-27, 2009, members "brainstormed" on who could replace the late Ruth Spitz and one other opening for a woman among the DSA vice chairs. Suggestions were: Teresa Ghilarducci "at times a member",...

"The term 'planning' is mostly used as a synonym for socialism, communism, and authoritarian and totalitarian economic management.
Sometimes only the German pattern of socialism-Zwangswirtschaft-is called planning, while the term socialism proper is reserved for the Russian pattern of outright socialization and bureaucratic operation of all plants, shops, and farms. At any rate, planning in this sense means all-around planning by the government and enforcement of these plans by the police power.
Planning in this sense means full government control of business. It is the antithesis of free enterprise, private initiative, private ownership of the means of production, market economy, and the price system. Planning and capitalism are utterly incompatible. Within a system of planning production is conducted according to the government's orders, not according to the plans of capitalists and entrepreneurs eager to profit by best filling the wants of the consumers.

"But the term planning is also used in a second sense. Lord Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Professor Hansen, and many other eminent men assert that they do not want to substitute totalitarian slavery for freedom. They declare that they are planing for a free society. They recommend a THIRD SYSTEM, which, as they say, is as far from socialism as it is from capitalism, which, as a THIRD solution of the problem of society's economic organization, stands midway between the two other systems, and while retaining the advantages of both, avoids the disadvantages inherent in each.

"These self-styled progressives are certainly mistaken when they pretend that their proposals are new and unheard of. The idea of this THIRD solution is very old indeed, and the French have long since baptized it with a pertinent name; they call it interventionism. Hardly anybody can doubt that history will link the idea of social security, more closely than with the American New Deal and with Sir William Beveridge, with the memory of Bismarck whom our fathers did not precisely describe as a liberal. All the essential ideas of present-day interventionist progressivism were neatly expounded by the supreme brain-trusters of imperial Germany, Professors Schmoller and Wagner, who at the same time urged their Kaiser to invade and to conquer the Americas. Far be it from me to condemn any idea only on account of its not being new. But as the progressives slander all their opponents as old-fashioned, orthodox, and reactionary, it is expedient to observe that it would be more appropriate to speak of the clash of two orthodoxies; the Bismarck orthodoxy versus the Jefferson orthodoxy.

Don't know that you would really call Dave's statements "paranoid".. just think for a moment: if times are as dire as they would need to be for the necessity of USING that food and other provisions, no matter how well prepared and armed you happen to be, there will likely be someone out there who will be as well armed as you, with the added incentive of being hungry and in need of provisions. It would then become a matter of who got the first good shot off.

Roosevelt's words, true then, true now:

"...This great Nation will endure as it has endured, will revive and will prosper.

So, first of all, let me assert my firm belief that the only thing we have to fear is fear itself-nameless, unreasoning, unjustified terror which paralyzes needed efforts to convert retreat into advance.

In every dark hour of our national life a leadership of frankness and vigor has met with that understanding and support of the people themselves which is essential to victory.

I am convinced that you will again give that support to leadership in these critical days...."

If the following definition fits, wear it:

Paranoia!
1. A psychotic disorder characterized by delusions of persecution with or without grandeur, often strenuously defended with apparent logic and reason.
2. Extreme, irrational distrust of others.

YES - Her Plan {Scheme} would Result in Nearly Doubling The Payroll Taxation [7% SS + 5% GRA

All the TALK about the Republicans trying to 'Privatize'

Then Paying-Out {Re-Distributing} at an Evened-Out 3%.

NOT a 'Plot' : Simply a Necessary "Scheme" that to

The gun lobby fights any kind of change.

I-95 remains a corridor for guns imported to NYC and NJ.

Our current laws are virtually unenforceable because they are state laws.
Guns cannot see state borders.

moderately objective,unbiased source of information out there ? And how could CBS,NYT, LAT survive for so long if their programs/news/reports are biased against the majority of seasoned viewers/readers?

The only thing I did not like about it, is although I am in Southwest Asia,
I am much closer to Europe/US in lifestyle, finances, technology, world view, etc.

However, I did answer Asia as my location, because that's where I am.

It probably will skew the results. :-(

Juan was fired for publically expressing a view that NPR felt was less than impartial. See:

http://www.cnn.com/2010/SHOWBIZ/10/21/npr.analyst.fired/index.html?hpt=T2

"NPR's president and CEO defended Thursday the network's decision to terminate the contract of Juan Williams after the news analyst made remarks elsewhere that she said veered from analysis into opinion, adding that it was NOT THE FIRST TIME."

Oh, but wait. I get it. You think a media reporter should inject his own opinions into his reporting? Just like Fox News? Maybe that's why Fox wants him as an employee.

NPR doesn't receive any federal money, Dexter. You know who receives hundreds of thousands of dollars in government subsidies while bitching about the evils of socialism and government handouts? Joe Miller and Michelle Bachmann.

Interestingly, the Koch meetings are managed by Kevin Gentry, an executive who doubles as a staffer in the Koch Industries lobbying office in Washington and as the key point person who helps deliver Koch charitable foundation grants. As ThinkProgress has documented, Koch Industries has dramatically boosted its own profits by using conservative front groups to manipulate public policy. The fusion between the ï¿½intellectualï¿½ conservative movement and big businesses opposed to regulations and accountability has a history in America dating back to the New Deal. During the thirties, the Du Pont family and other wealthy interests organized an assortment of ï¿½Liberty Leagueï¿½ front groups to try to defeat New Deal agenda items and repeal President Rooseveltï¿½s Social Security program. Now, corporations fund groups like the Heritage Foundation and the American Enterprise Institute ï¿½ both had representatives at the Koch meeting ï¿½ to further their lobbying agenda. The American Enterprise Institute even changed its name from the New Deal-era American Enterprise Association to try to dispel the notion that they were nothing more than a glorified business trade association.

As the memo states, Beck has addressed this regular gathering of conservative corporate executives in previous years. Past Koch meetings have included various Republican lawmakers, including DeMint, and Supreme Court Justices Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia as speakers.

Well, that was fun, thanks! I hope the info is helpful. I would have liked to see some other questions - one bit of trivia that would not

BpnJ,

One gets the Idea . . . TRhe NASB Survey was really a Survey as to whether you would "Buy" a new DRM Shortwave Radio Receiver . . .
http://www.worlddxclub.org.uk/WDXC_NASB-msg.html
-or- http://edxcnews.wordpress.com/

A - These were About your Present Day SWL :
How long you have been listening to shortwave
How many shortwave receivers do you have and what kind
Where do you buy your shortwave receivers
Do you take shortwave receivers with you when you travel
How many hours per week do you listen to shortwave
Are you an amateur radio operator Which shortwave stations do you listen to most What types of programs do you most like to listen to on shortwave, and in what languages

B - This was About your Internet Audio Content Listening of Shortwave Origination :
Do you listen to international radio broadcasts on other media such as Internet and mobile phones

C - These were About DRM Broadcasting and Listening to DRM Shortwave Broadcasts and "BUYING" a DRM Receiver . . .
Do you listen to DRM broadcasts
How much would you be willing to pay for a DRM receiver

well at least that was my impression of the nasb

You are not guaranteed the right to say anything you want in the performance of your job. The Government may not abridge your freedom of speech, but this does not apply to your employer, who can fire you for pretty much any reason.

One of the most misunderstood provisions of the First Amendment.
You can speak as you wish in the private sector, but there is no protection from reprisals by those who disagree.

The government, however, may not be one of them.

Although there seem to be those in the Congress who are just as unclear on this point.

And, as has been stated here in the past NPR (National Propaganda Radio) is, and never has been, in favour of free speech.

They are clown 'tards.

Hopefully, we just might get government funding stopped for both NPR and PBS.

Seems to be moving this way, doesn't it. Whether or not, should this move be successful, there is a change in content or thrust at NPR or PBS, is less certain.

More likely, with funding pressures increased, both will become as responsive to their donors as commercial broadcasters are to their advertisers.

In the US, after all, broadcasting is always about the money.

Oh, that won't happen. There are too many donors willing to replace the limited federal funding currently distributed.

There's a lot of money in public broadcasting. They'll just keep having pledge drives and making underwriting calls until they've met their budgets.

Now, if you REALLY want to squeeze them, hold them to the original charter provisions that prohibit commercial advertising.

Corporate undewriting would dry up pretty quickly if, there were no longer the heavily produced spots running on PBS.

Dear Reader:

I was shocked that NPR, a taxpayer-funded organization, fired Juan Williams for his innocent opinions he offered on Bill O'Reilly's Fox News show.

It is very clear to me that Democratic billionaire George Soros is once again trying to manipulate voters and enforce political correctness.

He and others who backed Barack Obama are horrified that America will soon reject their radical agenda.

They now want to close down and censor media that offer fair and balanced news.

You may not be aware that George Soros

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=977

made a $1,000,000 donation to MediaMatters,

Specifically, Soros made clear that his donation was to target Fox News.

Soros's front group has also smeared me. I consider their attacks a badge of honor, considering what Soros and that group stand for.

You also should know that shortly after Soros donated $1.8 million to NPR,

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6914

another of his favorite groups, NPR fired Juan Williams, even though he is a liberal.

Even Whoopi Goldberg and Barbara Walters agreed that there was nothing at all wrong with what Williams said about how he feels when he sees Muslims get on airplanes.

There should be no doubt that George Soros is threatening America's freedom of speech.

What better way to send a message to Soros than to defeat 100 of his Pelosi Democrats on Election Day.

Believe it or not, we're in a position to give Soros and his Democratic foot soldiers a shock.

Please help me elect a Republican Congress that not only will repeal Obamacare but also will de-fund NPR.

NPR doesn't deserve one thin dime of our tax money!

Already, your help is pouring in!

As I write now, we have raised an incredible $2.1 million.

I can't thank you enough for your support.

Imagine how angry Soros, Obama, and Pelosi will be when they hear Super PAC hit a $3 million goal -- just after George Soros targeted conservative media!

Imagine how angry they will be if they lose 100 members of Congress. We can make that happen. Believe it!

Thanks for your help,

According to the Los Angeles Times: "NPR receives no DIRECT federal funding for its operations, but between 1% and 3% of its $160-million budget comes from competitive grants AWARDERD BY PUBLICLY FUNDED ENTITIES such as the Corporation for Public Broadcasting [CPB] and the National Endowment for the Arts. Since 2009, NPR has received $8 million in competitive grants from the CPB for technology development and journalism initiatives. It also received a one-time grant of $78 million between 2007 and 2009 to upgrade satellite technology. Local NPR stations receive $90 million in annual appropriations from the CPB that amount to about 10% of their revenue, on average."

Corporation for Public Broadcasting (CPB) is a nonprofit, private corporation created by Congress in 1967. CPB’s annual budget is derived almost entirely ($386.8 million of its $480.4 million 2005) from federal grants; i.e., taxpayer money. With that capital, CPB is able to funds National Public Radio.

There are actually no such things as "criminal rights". What many call criminal rights are actually the rights of all citizens (and even non-citizens within our justice system) to protect them from unjust deprivation of life, liberty or property. This is why our system of juris prudence is SUPPOSED to work on the principal of "innocent until proven guilty". It's not perfect, but it's about as close as humans will ever get.

No "freedom of speech" issue here. We also have contract law, which is more relevant. Williams was embarrassing NPR by appearing on Fox News.
His bosses warned him. When he didn't stop going on Fox News they fired his ass. How can that be "censorship"?

The reactionaries want to destroy every mass media outlet they can't control.

We spend less per capita on public radio than any other allegedly modern civilization.

The underwriting announcements should very carefully avoid directly selling a product or a service. They may inform but not advocate.
Loosening up on underwriting announcements was part of a funding cut compromise.

So NPR gets less money in a year than Rush Limbaugh makes in a week?

Shocking Video Unearthed Democrats in their own words Covering up the Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac Scam

=--> http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=_MGT_cSi7Rs <--=

You would be hard pressed to find a politician who is less frank than Congressman Barney Frank.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=2384
http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Barney_Frank

Even in an occupation where truth and candor are often lacking, Congressman Frank is in a class by himself when it comes to rewriting history in creative ways. Moreover, he has a lot of history to rewrite in his re-election campaign this year.

No one contributed more to the policies behind the housing boom and bust, which led to the economic disaster we are now in, than Congressman Barney Frank.

His powerful position on the House of Representatives' Committee on Financial Services gave him leverage to force through legislation and policies which pressured banks and other lenders to grant mortgage loans to people who would not qualify under the standards which had long prevailed, and had long made mortgage loans among the safest investments around.

All this was done in the name of promoting more home-ownership among people who had neither the income nor the credit history that would meet traditional mortgage lending standards.

http://www.city-journal.org/html/10_1_the_trillion_dollar.html

To those who warned of the risks in the new policies,

=--> http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=cMnSp4qEXNM <--=

Congressman Frank replied in 2003 that critics "exaggerate a threat of safety" and "conjure up the possibility of serious financial losses to the Treasury, which I do not see." Far from being reluctant to promote risky practices, Barney Frank said, "I want to roll the dice a little bit more in this situation."

With the federal regulators leaning on banks to make more loans to people who did not meet traditional qualifications -- the "underserved population" in political Newspeak -- and quotas being given to Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to buy more of these riskier mortgages from the original lenders, critics pointed out the dangers in these pressures to meet arbitrary home ownership goals.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=cMnSp4qEXNM&NR=1
http://www.breitbart.tv/?p=184743
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/funderProfile.asp?fndid=5197
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/funderProfile.asp?fndid=5196

But Barney Frank counter-attacked against these critics.

In 2004 he said: "I believe that we, as the Federal Government, have probably done too little rather than too much to push them to meet the goals of affordable housing." He went further: "I would like to get Fannie and Freddie more deeply into helping low-income housing."

Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac were crucial to these schemes to force lenders to lend to those whom politicians wanted them to lend to, rather than to those who were most likely to pay them back. So it is no surprise that Barney Frank was very protective towards these two government-sponsored enterprises that were buying up mortgages that banks were willing to make under political pressure, but were often unwilling to keep.

The risks which banks were passing on to Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac were ultimately risks to the taxpayers. Although there was no formal guarantee to these enterprises, everybody knew that the federal government would always bail them out, if necessary, to keep them from failing. Everybody except Barney Frank.

"There is no guarantee," according Congressman Frank in 2003, "there is no explicit guarantee, there is no implicit guarantee, there is no wink-and-nod guarantee." Barney Frank is a master of rhetoric, who does not let the facts cramp his style.

Fast forward now to 2008, after the risky mortgages had led to huge numbers of defaults, dragging down Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and the financial markets in general -- and with them the whole economy.

Barney Frank was all over the media, pointing the finger of blame at everybody else. When financial analyst Maria Bartiromo asked Congressman Frank who was responsible for the financial crisis, he said, "right-wing Republicans." It so happens that conservatives were the loudest critics who had warned for years against the policies that Barney Frank pushed, but why let facts get in the way?

Ms. Bartiromo did not just accept whatever Barney Frank said. She said: "With all due respect, congressman, I saw videotapes of you saying in the past: 'Oh, let's open up the lending. The housing market is fine.'" His reply? "No, you didn't see any such tapes."

http://www.cnbc.com/id/27324124/CNBC_EXCLUSIVE_CNBC_TRANSCRIPT_CNBC_S_MARIA_BARTIROMO_INTERVIEWS_REP_BARNEY_FRANK_ON_CNBC_S_CLOSING_BELL_TODAY

"I did. I saw them on TV," she said. But Barney Frank did not budge. He understood that a good offense is the best defense. He also understands that rewriting history this election year is his best bet for keeping his long political career alive.

Among long-time politicians who are being seriously challenged for the first time this election year, Congressman Barney Frank of Massachusetts best epitomizes the cynical ruthlessness which hides behind their lofty rhetoric.

Having been a key figure in promoting the risky mortgage lending practices imposed by the federal government on lenders, and on Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to buy these risky mortgages from the lenders, Barney Frank blamed the resulting collapse of financial markets and the economy on everybody except Barney Frank.

In February 2009, as chairman of the House Financial Services Committee, Congressman Frank summoned the heads of some of the biggest banks in the country before his committee. In the words of the Los Angeles Times, these bankers "endured hours of hectoring" by "indignant lawmakers" on that committee.

These bankers were in no position to talk back to members of this committee, much less point out how committee members -- including Chairman Barney Frank -- had themselves promoted laws and policies responsible for the current economic disaster.

This is a committee with the power to promote legislation detrimental to this heavily regulated industry. That in turn gives the committee the power to force others to sit there and take it, when they are demonized on nationwide TV.

Congressman Barney Frank has never hesitated to use his power ruthlessly. On one occasion, he threatened bankers with summoning them before his committee and forcing them to reveal their home addresses -- which would of course put their spouses and children at the mercy of any kooks that might come along.

Meanwhile, Congressman Frank could piously invoke "social justice" in defense of similarly ruthless community activist groups like ACORN [http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6968] or National People's Action, which had in fact besieged the homes not only of bankers but also of public officials who dared to oppose their agendas. In Barney Frank's words, these groups were simply people who "cared about equity" and who were just "trying very hard to preserve some equity and some social justice."

But the harassment and shakedown activities of such groups were perhaps best captured by the words of a leader of one of these groups, who addressed her followers by saying: "We want it. They've got it. Let's go get it."

These were not just idle words. The dirty little secret that few in the media seem to want to discuss is that community activists, including Jesse Jackson, have over the years extracted literally billions of dollars from financial institutions, as the price of peace and of not challenging these institutions in hearings before federal regulators, as these groups are empowered to do under the Community Reinvestment Act.

http://www.city-journal.org/html/10_1_the_trillion_dollar.html
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/viewSubCategory.asp?id=809

Much of this money has been extracted in the form of risky mortgage loans of the sort that have been at the center of the housing boom and bust, and its repercussions in financial markets and in the economy as a whole.

Among others who have been at the heart of the risky lending behind the financial meltdown are Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, whom Congressman Barney Frank has also championed and protected. When federal regulators uncovered irregularities in Fannie Mae's accounting, and in 2004 issued what Barron's magazine called "a blistering 211-page report," Barney Frank lashed out -- not at Fannie Mae, but at the regulators who uncovered Fannie Mae's misdeeds. He said "a leadership change" in the regulatory agency was "overdue."

Politicians who say we need more regulation almost never mean regulation in the sense of impartially enforcing explicit rules, such as the accounting rules that Fannie Mae was violating to cover up its own risks. They mean regulation with arbitrary powers, such as those under the Community Reinvestment Act, which enable regulators to carry out the agendas that politicians give them.

When Congressman Jim Leach tried to get stronger regulation of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac back in 1992, and when President George W. Bush did so in 2004, Barney Frank opposed them.

=--> http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=cMnSp4qEXNM <--=
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1RZVw3no2A4&feature=related

A reining in of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac would be a reining in of Barney Frank's power. But he can't stop the voters from reining in his power, unless he can once more get by this election year with pious rhetoric to conceal his cynical actions

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/funderProfile.asp?fndid=5197
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/funderProfile.asp?fndid=5196

How Andrew Cuomo gave birth to the mortgage crisis

There are as many starting points for the mortgage meltdown as there are fears about how far it has yet to go, but one decisive point of departure is the final years of the Clinton administration, when a kid from Queens without any real banking or real-estate experience was the only man in Washington with the power to regulate the giants of home finance, the Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA) and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (FHLMC), better known as Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac.

Andrew Cuomo, the youngest Housing and Urban Development secretary in history, made a series of decisions between 1997 and 2001 that gave birth to the country's current crisis. He took actions that—in combination with many other factors—helped plunge Fannie and Freddie into the subprime markets without putting in place the means to monitor their increasingly risky investments. He turned the Federal Housing Administration mortgage program into a sweetheart lender with sky-high loan ceilings and no money down, and he legalized what a federal judge has branded "kickbacks" to brokers that have fueled the sale of overpriced and unsupportable loans. Three to four million families are now facing foreclosure, and Cuomo is one of the reasons why.

What he did is important—not just because of what it tells us about how we got in this hole, but because of what it says about New York's attorney general, who has been trying for months to don a white hat in the subprime scandal, pursuing cases against banks, appraisers, brokers, rating agencies, and multitrillion-dollar, quasi-public Fannie and Freddie.

It all starts, as the headlines of recent weeks do, with these two giant banks. But in the hubbub about their bailout, few have noticed that the only federal agency with the power to regulate what Cuomo has called "the gods of Washington" was HUD. Congress granted that power in 1992, so there were only four pre-crisis secretaries at the notoriously political agency that had the ability to rein in Fannie and Freddie: ex–Texas mayor Henry Cisneros and Bush confidante Alfonso

Jackson, who were driven from office by criminal investigations; Mel Martinez, who left to chase a U.S. Senate seat in Florida; and Cuomo, who used the agency as a launching pad for his disastrous 2002 gubernatorial candidacy.

With that many pols at the helm, it's no wonder that most analysts have portrayed Fannie and Freddie as if they were unregulated renegades, and rarely mentioned HUD in the ongoing finger-pointing exercise that has ranged, appropriately enough, from Wall Street to Alan Greenspan. But the near-collapse of these dual pillars in recent weeks is rooted in the HUD junkyard, where every Cuomo decision discussed here was later ratified by his Bush successors.

And that's not an accident: Perhaps the only domestic issue George Bush and Bill Clinton were in complete agreement about was maximizing home ownership, each trying to lay claim to a record percentage of homeowners, and both describing their efforts as a boon to blacks and Hispanics. HUD, Fannie, and Freddie were their instruments, and, as is now apparent, the more unsavory the means, the greater the growth. But, as Paul Krugman noted in the Times recently, "homeownership isn't for everyone," adding that as many as 10 million of the new buyers are stuck now with negative home equity—meaning that with falling house prices, their mortgages exceed the value of their homes. So many others have gone through foreclosure that there's been a net loss in home ownership since 1998.

It is also worth remembering that the motive for this bipartisan ownership expansion probably had more to do with the legion of lobbyists working for lenders, brokers, and Wall Street than an effort to walk in MLK's footsteps. Each mortgage was a commodity that could be sold again and again—from the brokers to the bankers to the securities market. If, at the bottom of this pyramid, the borrower collapsed under the weight of his mortgage's impossible terms, the home could be repackaged a second or a third time and either refinanced or dumped on a new victim.

Those are the interests that surrounded Cuomo, who did more to set these forces of unregulated expansion in motion than any other secretary and then boasted about it, presenting his initiatives as crusades for racial and social justice.

Cuomo was shrewd enough at the age of 24 to manage his father's successful 1982 gubernatorial campaign, and to help run his government. The only statewide campaign his father ever lost was in 1994—when Andrew was at HUD as an assistant secretary and couldn't manage it. He is as quick and as silver-tongued as the elder Cuomo he sounds so much like, but HUD was a test of his depth, so he found himself balancing competing forces and making deals on a grander scale than he was used to in Albany. We now know that he was also making history.

In 2000, Cuomo required a quantum leap in the number of affordable, low-to-moderate-income loans that the two mortgage banks—known collectively as Government Sponsored Enterprises—would have to buy. The GSEs don't actually sell mortgages to borrowers. They buy them from banks and mortgage companies, allowing lenders to replenish their capital and make more loans. They also purchase mortgage-backed securities, which are pools of mortgages regularly acquired by the GSEs from investment firms. The government chartered these banks to pump money into the mortgage market and, while they did it, to make a strong enough profit to attract shareholders. That created a tug-of-war between their efforts to maximize shareholder value, which drove them toward high-end mortgages, and their congressionally mandated obligation to finance loans for those who needed help. The 1992 law required HUD's secretary to make sure housing goals were being met and, every four years, set new goals for Fannie and Freddie.

Cuomo's predecessor, Henry Cisneros, did that for the first time in December 1995, taking a cautious approach and moving the GSEs toward a requirement that 42 percent of their mortgages serve low- and moderate-income families. Cuomo raised that number to 50 percent and dramatically hiked GSE mandates to buy mortgages in underserved neighborhoods and for the "very-low-income." Part of the pitch was racial, with Cuomo contending that Fannie and Freddie weren't granting mortgages to minorities at the same rate as the private market. William Apgar, Cuomo's top aide, told The Washington Post: "We believe that there are a lot of loans to black Americans that could be safely purchased by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac if these companies were more flexible."

While many saw this demand for increasingly "flexible" loan terms and standards as a positive step for low-income and minority families, others warned that they could have potentially dangerous consequences. Franklin Raines, the Fannie chairman and first black CEO of a Fortune 500 company, warned that Cuomo's rules were moving Fannie into risky territory: "We have not been a major presence in the subprime market," he said, "but you can bet that under these goals, we will be." Fannie's chief financial officer, Timothy Howard, said that "making loans to people with less-than-perfect credit" is "something we should do." Cuomo wasn't shy about embracing subprime mortgages as a possible consequence of his goals. "GSE presence in the subprime market could be of significant benefit to lower-income families, minorities, and families living in underserved areas," his report on the new goals noted.

Moody's didn't sound an immediate alarm, but its senior analyst, Stanislas Rouyer, said the expansion into subprime loans and the lower level of documentation that came with them could mean that Fannie 's loss levels would increase in the future. Steven Holmes, a reporter from the Times's Washington bureau, wrote at the time: "In moving, even tentatively, into this new area of lending, Fannie Mae is taking on significantly more risk, which may not pose any difficulties during flush economic times. But," he added, "the government-subsidized corporation may run into trouble in an economic downturn, prompting a government rescue similar to that of the savings and loan industry in the 1980s."

When HUD released the next set of goals in 2004, it reported that after Cuomo's previous edict, there had been a sudden spurt of GSE subprime investment, "partly in response to higher affordable-housing goals set by HUD in 2000." Fannie had gone from $1.2 billion in subprime-mortgage and securities purchases in 2000 to $9.2 billion in 2001 and $15 billion in 2002. Freddie's numbers were murkier, but clearly also on the rise. In 2003 alone, the two bought $81 billion in subprime securities—which also count against the goals.

Fannie also developed a "flexible" product line, providing up to 100 percent financing and requiring borrowers to make as little as a $500 contribution, and bought $13.7 billion of those loans in 2003. In addition to subprime loans and securities, both banks burst into the "alt-a" market, making alternative products easily available to borrowers who had slightly better credit histories than subprime borrowers, but were unwilling to provide full documentation of their financial histories. (It was the "alt-a" investments that recently brought down the private bank IndyMac.) These risky adventures, according to the 2004 HUD report, prompted Freddie to claim that "the increased goals created tension in its business practices between meeting the goals and conducting responsible lending practices," a self-serving attempt to plant the blame back on HUD.

After this initial uptick, the two banks purchased $434 billion in securities backed by subprime loans between 2004 and 2006. The Washington Post noted this June that the GSEs' aggressive acquisitions "created a market for more such lending" by others, feeding the fire. No one knows just how big a bite the subprime mess is now taking out of the GSEs, or how much of that portfolio will ultimately go bad, but it has become axiomatic that, whatever the total, it is too much, since it will have seriously shaken confidence in these two linchpin institutions.

That June Post story focused its critical reassessment of HUD's affordable-housing goals on the department's 2004 decision—during the Bush re-election campaign—to juice them up again, pushing the target to 56 percent by 2007. Though the story never mentioned Cuomo—whose three-year, eight-point goal hike exceeded Bush's more gradual six-point increase—it did quote his top aide William Apgar, who helped craft the 2000 policy, saying: "It was a mistake." Apgar, who now teaches at Harvard, conceded, "In hindsight, I would have done it differently."

But raising the affordable-housing goals was only half the Cuomo story.

The HUD secretary is also required to produce voluminous rules that govern how the GSEs meet those goals, and the 187-page rules Cuomo issued opened the door to abuse.

The rules explicitly rejected the idea of imposing any new reporting requirements on the GSEs. In other words, HUD wanted Fannie and Freddie to buy risky loans, but the department didn't want to hear just how risky they were.

HUD conceded in the rules that many consumer groups had urged it to insist that the GSEs provide "loan-level data" revealing how many of their loans contained high interest rates, prepayment penalties, or other requirements that presaged bad loans.

Indeed, in March 2000, HUD had acknowledged that the new goal-driven pressure on the GSEs might "warrant increased monitoring and additional reporting." But when the final rules were adopted in October, that momentary caution had been abandoned: "HUD is not establishing any requirements for additional data to carry out this rule." The report explained that the GSEs "objected" to information mandates "related to their purchases of high-cost mortgages," so HUD decided against imposing "an undue additional burden." HUD would have no way of telling how abusive the low-income mortgages it was mandating might be.

Reporting from the GSEs to HUD "does not provide the details . . . [for] effective monitoring of their subprime activity," warned Allen Fishbein in a housing journal two years after the rules were published. Fishbein, who was the senior advisor at HUD for GSE oversight under Cuomo and is now general counsel at the Center for Community Change, said that HUD "should have the necessary information" to determine if the GSEs were purchasing "loans with predatory features," but that it did not.

In a Voice interview, Fishbein, who was reluctant to say a critical word about the regulations he and Cuomo developed, did acknowledge that "it would have been a beneficial thing" to have required such data from the GSEs in the 2000 rule-making, though he contended that HUD has "the general authority to collect it" without a rule-making.

"I certainly would have favored more data in hindsight," he said. But the failure to include reporting requirements that many consumer groups championed at the time was an invitation then—and not just in retrospect—for the GSEs to hide bad loans. Fishbein prefers to blame the lack of verification on the Bush administration, but when Cuomo issued his rules barely a week before the 2000 election, he failed to put any data demands in place that would have alerted the next administration, regardless of who it was, to any risks in the new GSE portfolio. In fact, Bush's HUD did institute some reporting requirements in 2004, but then never revealed much of what was learned.

But Cuomo wasn't only stifling data that HUD could use to keep the GSEs out of trouble. He also went against his own recommendation—in a report issued jointly with the Treasury Department a few months earlier —that called for a prohibition against the GSEs purchasing loans "with high costs and/or predatory features." Instead, Cuomo decided without explanation to adopt rules that prohibited nothing.

Consumer groups then contended that if HUD wasn't going to bar bad loans, it should at least penalize the GSEs for every one they made. Cuomo declined to do that as well, instead declaring that loans with specific odious terms would not be counted against the goals. His allies have pointed to this refusal as evidence of his toughness, but Cuomo couldn't very well reward Fannie and Freddie for purchasing bad loans. And the absence of any reporting requirements made it virtually impossible to figure out which loans shouldn't be credited anyway.

Cuomo also adopted Fannie and Freddie's standards of what a bad loan was, almost verbatim. For example, HUD accepted Fannie's many caveats on prepayment penalties—a predatory practice long condemned by housing advocates. The final rules allowed the GSEs to take goal credit on some loans that carried these penalties, even though these sky-high charges often either bound borrowers to bad mortgages or cost them dearly to climb out.

It should come as no surprise, then, that Fannie conceded in 2005 that 10 percent of its loans had such prepayment penalties. HUD's next rulemaking, in 2004, freely acknowledged that "certain practices were not enumerated in the regulations adopted in 2000," including certain kinds of prepayment penalties, and that they "often lock borrowers into disadvantageous loan products." But once again, HUD did nothing about those practices.

While fashioning these final rules, Cuomo wrestled with the octopus-like reach of Fannie and Freddie, which spend tens of millions each year on lobbying firms. The GSEs hired 88 lobbying firms over six years, three of which were friendly enough with Cuomo to give to his campaign committee later.

Just a look at the New Yorkers tied to the GSEs must have impressed Cuomo, who, after all, would soon return to New York politics. Harold Ickes, the former Clinton chief of staff and a Democratic power broker in this state, was on the Freddie board. Tom Downey, the former New York congressman who would later donate $21,894 to Cuomo, was a Fannie lobbyist. And Al D'Amato, the former banking committee chair who'd shepherded Cuomo's appointment through the Republican Senate, was a Fannie consultant.

But Cuomo was closer to the GSEs' most formidable opponents—namely, the Mortgage Bankers Association (MBA), regarded as the most influential private real-estate finance lobby in Washington, and the upstart FM Watch, a new coalition of heavyweights from Chase to AIG. Both of these groups wanted Cuomo to put as much affordable-housing pressure on the GSEs as he could, and they said so in their releases and newsletters. They opposed what they called Fannie and Freddie's profit-driven "mission creep," which they saw as a publicly subsidized invasion of their high-end mortgage market. Their goal was the same as Cuomo's: to push Fannie and Freddie deeper into low-end mortgages, consistent with the mission statement in their charters.

Two of Cuomo's aides who had also worked for his father, Howard Glaser and Todd Howe, left HUD to take top jobs at the association in the middle of the GSE rule-making (the MBA parted company with both once Andrew was out of HUD). In 2000, a year after Howe joined the association, he described how he had helped build a grassroots MBA effort to pressure Congress and others into supporting HUD in what he described as the "battle" being "waged against Fannie Mae." Glaser's Harvard alumni biography says he "played a key role in negotiating a multi-billion-dollar increase in GSE affordable-housing goals." He and Howe—who insist they had "no contact" with Cuomo on the MBA's behalf—have given $3,000 to Cuomo in recent years.

The MBA also retained Brad Johnson, another ex–Mario Cuomo aide described as his "eyes and ears" in Washington, to lobby HUD while Andrew was secretary. Three other long-term HUD staffers who worked there under Cuomo—including the lawyer who was the contact person listed on the GSE rules—also ended up at the MBA or one of its lobbying firms. Angelo Mozilo, the CEO of Countrywide who's become the face of the subprime scandal, was at one point the MBA's president and a member of its executive committee throughout Cuomo's HUD tenure. He and other MBA leaders became Cuomo donors, with Mozilo donating $1,000 twice—in 2002 and 2006.

Describing HUD as "the court of last resort" and "a key ally," MBA president Kit Sumner hailed Cuomo shortly after the announcement of the GSE goals at the organization's annual convention, which usually draws 6,000 lenders and brokers. Cuomo spoke at the convention every year during his tenure, appeared there as recently as 2004, and was listed on the agenda for 2005, though the MBA says he didn't attend. His father was a paid convention speaker in 2004 as well. Cuomo was regarded as such a friend of the MBA that National People's Action, a Chicago-based housing group, staged protests unrelated to the GSEs at the MBA, HUD, and Cuomo's home in McLean, Virginia. The group's spokesman declared: "We know that the MBA has a lot of pull with Andrew Cuomo, and we tried to convince them to back off. MBA said they are fully committed to HUD."

FM Watch's lobbyists during the Cuomo years at HUD included Tony Podesta, the brother of Clinton's chief of staff, and the law firm Akin Gump, where Cuomo has so many allies that his campaign committee has collected $67,550 in contributions there since he formed it in early 2001. Joel Jankowsky, head of the Akin lobbying group that represented this single-issue group, gave $7,500 to Cuomo—most of it within weeks after the formation of Andrew's committee in 2001. Jankowsky is a close personal friend of Dan Glickman, who joined Akin when he stepped down as agriculture secretary just as Cuomo left HUD in 2001. Glickman's wife Rhoda was Cuomo's deputy chief of staff, and the two Glickmans donated $10,500 to Cuomo. They also covered $23,900 of their own expenses traveling and fundraising for the campaign, which listed that as an in-kind contribution.

These groups clearly had Cuomo's ear, but he was also being pushed to commit the GSEs to more affordable and, in some cases, riskier loans by consumer organizations—groups like ACORN, which has considerable clout in New York elections. The housing advocates were happy with Cuomo's goal-setting at HUD, but the lax reporting requirements and predatory-lending loopholes suggest who was actually driving his agenda. The MBA and FM Watch didn't care about these issues; advocates did. When the final rules were announced, most of the consumer groups said little about these loopholes, but Bruce Marks, CEO of the Neighborhood Assistance Corporation, criticized the tepid enforcement: "What you're seeing is Fannie and Freddie flexing their muscle," he observed. "They have more money than God, and they use it."

Cuomo wouldn't answer Voice questions for this piece, but he was briefed on every issue raised in it and discussed his responses with Glaser, who replied in both interviews and e-mails. Glaser insisted that raising the GSE goals "was a good thing then and now," contending that "no one ever criticized Cuomo for not taking on the fight at HUD" and blaming "the Bush team that never even tried" for the mistakes that have led to the current debacle.

He dismissed the failure to include any reporting requirements in the rules by confusing it with a parallel path that Cuomo took in his final two years—an eventually successful effort to get the GSEs to supply HUD with data on the terms of 10 million loans from their automated underwriting (AU) system. Glaser contends that the GSE's ad hoc decision to turn over that information—which no court was even asked to order—obviated the need to put any data requirements in a binding rule. It's odd that Glaser makes that argument now, since Cuomo never did so when he was making the rules, and when he went on for pages about whether or not to require loan data. In fact, Cuomo's handling of the AU data itself has long been a sore spot. Fishbein's 2002 article noted that HUD completed its review of the data in 2000, but "inexplicably has yet to release the results." (Fishbein says he doesn't know if this was Cuomo's fault.)

Glaser argues that "mortgage bankers thought Cuomo was the toughest secretary they had ever known," especially Mozilo. But Cuomo was celebrated in issue after issue of the MBA's weekly publication, Real Estate Finance Today, and his MBA alliance went well beyond the GSEs—in particular, the steps he took to reshape the Federal Housing Administration, which guarantees millions of mortgages. These actions, too, sought to maximize homeownership—this time by opening the FHA's door to borrowers unable to qualify in the past, a lofty goal that has also helped spur an FHA delinquency rate that exceeds its subprime competitors. The MBA cheered each of these Cuomo decisions—dramatically raising the limits on the size of FHA loans, slicing the down-payment requirement to 3 percent, and cutting the agency's insurance-premium costs virtually in half. Cuomo even supported down-payment and closing-cost assistance programs that allowed FHA borrowers to buy a home without spending a cent of their own money up front.

To the MBA, bigger FHA guarantees on the loans that MBA members granted, combined with easier terms, was a recipe for greater profits. That's why Cuomo announced the insurance cut at their convention shortly before he left office. And that's why the front page of the MBA paper was headlined "MBA Welcomes New FHA Ceiling" when he raised the loan limits, eventually nearly doubling them to $235,000. His decision to grant such large FHA mortgages was, as the GSEs pointed out, in stark contrast with his efforts to drive them into the affordable market. Indeed, it was GSE opposition to the new FHA ceilings that sparked the firefights between them and the Cuomo/MBA combine. At first, the Bush administration echoed Cuomo's FHA policies, but when the crisis hit, it began condemning down-payment assistance and urging a sliding, risk-based scale of insurance premiums.

Cuomo's fellow attorney generals in Illinois, California, and Massachusetts have filed lawsuits against Countrywide and other mortgage companies in the current crisis. And those lawsuits are aimed in part at the sucker punch called "yield-spread premium" that was thrown at millions of households who got mortgages from brokers. Brokers have taken over the origination market in recent years by aggressively advertising, and they decide which lenders get the business.

Cuomo hasn't sued anybody over these outrageous payments to brokers—which are based on the "spread" between the high interest rate that brokers persuade unwary borrowers to accept and the par or going rate they would ordinarily have to pay. If Cuomo did sue, it might make for an awkward moment or two in court, since it was Cuomo who issued a rule in 1999 that dozens of federal courts have since found legalized the yield-spread premiums. He was the first HUD secretary to say they were "not illegal per se," nullifying most of the 150 class-action lawsuits against them filed across the country.

There are certainly those who believe that YSPs are at the heart of the crisis. Senator Chris Dodd, the chair of the banking committee, is trying to ban them, prodded by the fact that up to 90 percent of subprime mortgages quietly triggered these lucrative payments. When the Federal Reserve recently considered barring them and then backed off, a Times editorial charged that it had "balked on banning the practice whereby brokers maximize their commissions by signing up borrowers for the most expensive loan possible, even when the borrower qualifies for a cheaper." The Illinois attorney general, Lisa Madigan, accused Countrywide of structuring their deals with brokers "in a manner that virtually guaranteed" that they were "more concerned with getting the highest YSP possible than getting their borrowers the best loan possible," oblivious to "the possible fraud that this financial incentive would motivate."

Actually, no one has described what's wrong with YSPs better than Andrew Cuomo himself. In his first year as HUD secretary, when his earliest proposal to reform YSPs attracted a Times story, he said: "Too often consumers think the brokers are working for them. In reality, they are working against them." Cuomo's proposed rules that year did not go so far as to prohibit YSPs, but they did require brokers to enter into a written contract with borrowers; the brokers had to check one of three boxes, revealing whether they represented borrowers only or were receiving lender fees. Then they had to disclose the size of the fees, which usually far exceeded what the borrowers were paying.

Cuomo said the point was "to discourage practices that give financial incentives to mortgage brokers that offer higher-priced loans than what are generally available in the marketplace." The MBA, which includes brokers and other industry organizations, got Congressional leaders to oppose it, and Cuomo retreated. A year and a half later, Cuomo adopted a new rule that did the opposite of his first proposal. "The Lending Industry Welcomes Policy Clarification" was the subhead on the MBA's cover story. Cuomo's 1999 rule, issued under pressure from Congress to come up with a policy statement one way or the other because of all the lawsuits, found that YSPs were legal if "reasonably related to the value of the goods" actually furnished or the services "actually performed" by brokers. The Cuomo rule-making also stated that "HUD does not view the name of the payment as the appropriate issue," even though calling something a premium based on a "yield" and a "spread" pretty much destroys any notion that the payment is tied to a good or a service.

Experts point out that borrowers usually have no idea that such a thing exists. In fact, Harvard law professor Howell Jackson discovered that the HUD booklet on settlement costs, issued for distribution to borrowers on Cuomo's watch, never mentions YSPs or how they are financed. "You may wish to ask about the fees that the mortgage broker will receive for its services" is as close as the booklet gets. "Critically absent," concludes Jackson, "is disclosure of the fact that the borrower finances the cost of YSPs through higher monthly mortgage payments." In 1997, Cuomo's proposed rule said that "a consensus" on only one point emerged from the negotiations with the department's broadly based advisory group, namely that "a rule should require that mortgage brokers inform borrowers of the role that they are serving early enough in the transaction to allow the consumer to shop for alternatives." Cuomo's final rule, much like the GSE edict, concluded: "This statement does not mandate disclosures beyond those currently required."

Glaser acknowledged that YSPs are a big cause of the crisis, though he pointedly insisted that they were "not the biggest," and he blamed them on Bush. He pointed out that Mel Martinez issued a YSP rule in late 2001, and claimed that he did so because Cuomo's ruling permitted class-action lawsuits. In fact, courts around the country had denied class-action certifications based on Cuomo's ruling, but a circuit court in Alabama decided that Cuomo's regulations were "ambiguous," which is why Martinez then issued what he called a "clarification" of the Cuomo regulations. But as a San Francisco circuit court found shortly thereafter, the Martinez clarification essentially "reiterated" Cuomo's position and "carries forward the same principles." A dissenting member of the same California panel deplored Cuomo's ruling and said "the phrase 'yield spread premium' " was a "way of avoiding calling a kickback a kickback."

The sad fact is that Cuomo's surrender on YSPs can't be excused as an unfortunate consequence of well-motivated policy, as his defenders have argued regarding his FHA and GSE actions. He has no cover for this one; it exposes him as an agent of special interests. And looking at his GSE and FHA policies through the lens of his retreat on these payoffs (which even Glaser, in a marked change from his MBA days, now condemns) suggests a pattern of compromised judgments.

With Martinez, who was hailed at a $250,000 fundraiser co-chaired by superlobbyist felon Jack Abramoff right after he stepped down as secretary, and Jackson, who is an FBI target now, following him at HUD, Cuomo was, in some respects, the last chance that borrowers had before the crisis hit. The grand ambitions unleashed when he orchestrated his father's win at such an early age propelled him to HUD's helm at a similarly early age, and convinced him to run for governor before he was ready. He seems more comfortable at 50 in the state attorney general's office than he has ever appeared in his public life, but the country will be living with his HUD mistakes, ill- or well-intended, for a long time to come.

Well, yes, and no ...

When a congressman "forgets" to pay his taxes and he just suddenly apologizes and pays them--that is criminal rights ...

When a congressman is "accused" of "inappropriate behavior" with his/her aids and it is just forgotten--that is criminal rights ...

When a public servant get "special rights" and is allowed to escape criminal punishment, as I am sure you have seen before--that is criminal rights ...

Or, there are criminal rights, alright ... it is just shocking who the criminals are!

Actually, DDT is not as banned as one might think ... when I worked for Occidental Chemical ag chem division in the early 1980's, it was only necessary to file a wavier claiming nothing but DDT was suitable or would work for insect control of certain insects and a wavier was granted for its' use ... I can't remember the name of the product which contained DDT which still was in use, but it contained 20% DDT ... it is severely limited in use though ...

'In analyzing the mortgage crisis, economist Walter E. Williams has written: “Starting with the Community Reinvestment Act of 1977, that was given more teeth during the Clinton administration, Congress started intimidating banks and other financial institutions into making loans, so-called sub-prime loans, to high-risk homebuyers and businesses.
“The carrot offered was that these high-risk loans would be purchased by the government-sponsored enterprises Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. Anyone with an ounce of brains would have known that this was a prescription for disaster but there was a congressional chorus of denial,” he added.
“The financial collapse of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac is not a failure of the free market because lending institutions in a free market would not have taken on the high-risk loans,” said Williams. “They were forced to by the heavy hand of government.” '

They didn't think spewing Liberal Dogma was embarrassing?

That looks good for losing government money at the very least and maybe a BIG FAT law suit for Juan Williams, on grounds that "embarrassing" was That's because they don't get tax money anymore. Not for operations.

When they do get facilities grants (NTIA) or development grants (CPB) they are contingent on local matching funds. I can assure you that most public radio stations are very frugal and good stewards of the public trust.

PBS and NPR are the Leftist elites playground supported by tax dollars and misused by Liberals as their own personal Propaganda network.

The people you attack are using their own talent and money to fund their broadcasts.

I see your capacity for complex thought is still running at usual levels; Juan Williams never worked for PBS.

The elites are Rush Limbaugh and the Koch Brothers. I don't think anybody's made a million dollars at PBS since Kermit the Frog.

Liberty Net: October 16, 2010

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE LIBERTY NET is a gathering of thoughtful, philosophical minds and well-informed sources every week, and this time was no exception ï¿½ and noise was so low that even the weakest signals were perfectly understandable. Warm up your radios every Saturday night and join in the discussion on or near 3950 kHz SSB at 10PM Eastern Time.

Here are some examples of the real free speech and free thought the Liberty Net is famous for:

ï¿½ Now that US taxpayers are paying millions to bring Hamas refugees here, maybe itï¿½s time to rethink our immigration and foreign policies. By angering ï¿½ and then importing ï¿½ Muslims, we are essentially jamming a stick into a beehive, and then gathering the angry bees and bringing them into our homes. (56 minutes)

ï¿½ The monetary ï¿½discriminationï¿½ claims of over $1.5 billion for 95,000 ï¿½Black farmersï¿½ have been exposed as a hoax, since there were never more than 35,000 Black farmers during the period in question. (59 minutes)

ï¿½ The administrationï¿½s ï¿½financial reformï¿½ program doesnï¿½t address any of the problems which caused the current crisis ï¿½ itï¿½s like polishing the fenders of a car thatï¿½s just been totaled. (1 hour 14 minutes)

ï¿½ Maybe Americans should vote for nobody in the upcoming elections ï¿½ since among the political class, when it comes to the things that really matter, it is indubitably true that Nobody Cares. (2 hours 9 minutes)

ï¿½ A documentary film is in the works, to be based on the life and philosophy of the late Irwin ï¿½Irbï¿½ Richardt, W2VJZ, who spoke out strongly against Zionist control and corruption in America from his Sons of Liberty Farm ï¿½ now a park ï¿½ in New Jersey. (2 hours 21 minutes)

ï¿½ As the skin protects the body from pathogens, so our border is supposed to protect our nation from invaders. But the Middle Eastern clique which effectively controls US immigration policy has purposely left us open to aliens who will, even if they do not intend to do so, act as metastasizing cancer cells and seal our fate. (2 hours 31 minutes)

ï¿½ Grassroots Americans are rightly alarmed by Muslim immigration and expansion, but what they donï¿½t understand is that it is a group with a strong racial hatred for Muslims that is instrumental in bringing them here. The motivation? To make the Muslims our enemies, so that Israelï¿½s enemies will now become our enemies, which facilitates American participation in an ancient war which we really should have nothing to do with. The Muslims are a cultural-racial bomb which is being dropped on America. Should we focus on the bomb ï¿½ or on those who are dropping it? (2 hours 36 minutes)

ï¿½ Only one country on Earth has been saddled with a racial guilt trip comparable to Americaï¿½s: Germany. These guilt trips are used to enforce a perverse ï¿½moralityï¿½ in which open borders are a necessity ï¿½ and racial preservation a sin. But there are signs of a stirring, as German Chancellor Merkel has now stated that ï¿½multiculturalism has utterly failed.ï¿½ (2 hours 38 minutes)

ï¿½ Why is the ï¿½Americanï¿½ establishment so fanatically dedicated to the historically unprecedented purpose of reducing and eventually eliminating the nationï¿½s founding race? (2 hours 42 minutes)

A big ï¿½thank youï¿½ to N2SAG and N2IRJ and especially W1WCR for their hard work which makes the Liberty Net and its Internet annexes possible. You can download the Net right here at http://3950.net and listen in your gym or on your way to work or anywhere you choose.

Mr. McKittrick, after very careful consideration, sir, I've come to the conclusion that your economic system sucks.

I suggest you quit making a fool of yourself. GWB and his pals took it all with them when they left office. We're fighting over the crumbs while they're setting up shop in Bahrain and who knows where.

One can see a very similar style between the skinhead and the gay

You're asking the world to believe that a law was passed in 1977 and markets remained totally somnolent for 25 years or so, when suddenly Boom! Bang! the bubble occurs, the subprime market goes crazy the great bubble expands, then bursts. All because of a law passed when Carter was president. Of course, the Republicans, who held congress and the senate for 12 years and the presidency for 6 could do nothing about it because they feared Barney Frank. Go tell this bullshit to your kids or pets. No one in their right mind believes it. The market boom and bust occurred because of GREED, you imbecile, and complete failure of Congress to regulate. Bankers started rewarding themselves simply for letting loans, so they let loans to anyone. An imminent collapse was averted by the practice of bundling the loans and "insuring" the bundles. It was a pyramid scam. As long as they kept letting bum loans, RE prices would go up. As long as RE prices went up, there was no risk in letting a bum loan. And, Glory to God! every lousy, rotten unsupportable loan brought bonuses to the loan officers and the banking executives. Richardson, president of Wamu (and ardent A Republican -- deregulate, get Washington off our backs!) earned $100 million in bonuses from lousy subprime loans that eventually put his bank into recievership. There is plenty of blame to go around, but Pugs drove the ship right into the iceberg.

Thank God for France. While American liberals tremble at the idea of sending an angry e mail to congress for fear that their name will appear on the State Department's list of terrorists, French workers are on the front lines choking on tear gas and fending off billyclubs in hand-to-hand combat with Sarkozy's Gendarmerie. That's because the French haven't forgotten their class roots. When the government gets too big for its britches, people pour out onto to the streets and Paris becomes a warzone replete with overturned Mercedes Benzs, smashed storefront windows, and stacks of smoldering tires issuing pillars of black smoke. This is what democracy looks like when it hasn't been emasculated by decades of propaganda and consumerism.

-also- Please Note That Many/Most US States also Give/Allow these Same Write-Offs and

The same can be said for all the so-called "Public"
Non-Commercial Radio and TV Stations in the USA :
All Are By Means Both Directly and Indirectly Fully Funded By Government Taxed and Un-Taxed Money*.

KQED SF Bay Area & WBGH Boston & WNET NYC WETA WDC & KCET LA are a few examples of the Mega Foundations {Tax Free Corporations} which Government Taxed and Un-Taxed Money*.

Actually, the gays don't bother me nearly as much as the people who keep

We have a lot more important things to worry about than what gay people

I am an amateur computer geek. It's tempting to open a terminal and

Luckily I knew the answer without having to look anywhere because I

Nope, but are you serious???? Goldwater, Eisenhower, Buckley and.....Glen Beck?????? Can't you pick a better leader?

Nope, the repug leader is just about the worst you could have picked.
You quit being the party of main street years ago. Now you are the party of draft dodgers like Bush and Cheney, you are the party of the ignorant, the party of racism and the party of hatred.

The repugs call our brothers and sisters of the al-Islam "muzzies", refer to our president as an immigrant and claim to be brave when none of them has ever been in the armed forces. The fact is you have reduced the party of Lincoln to the meaningless party, the party of hatred.

It is indisputable that since at least the beginning of the Twentieth Century the American Liberal Fascist Left has been engaged in a guerilla war against its own country, while having a love fest with their totalitarian idols who seek our destruction.

As Dr. Jamie Glazov explains in the Preface to his new book, United in Hate: The Left’s Romance with Tyranny and Terror (WND Books):
http://www.amazon.com/United-Hate-Romance-Tyranny-Terror/dp/1935071602

"Throughout the twentieth century, the Western Left supported one totalitarian killing machine after another. Prominent intellectuals from George Bernard Shaw to Bertolt Brecht to Susan Sontag venerated mass murderers such as Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Castro, and Ho Chi Minh, habitually excusing their atrocities while blaming America, and even the victims, for the crimes.

http://www.GlobalMuseumOnCommunism.org

"After 9/11, when the Islamist death cult made itself the West's new worst adversary, history repeated itself. The Left once again gave its affection to mass murderers and heaped its scorn on America and the West. The only difference this time around was that the Left's favorite murderers were waving not the red flag of proletarian revolution, but the black flag of Islamic jihad. As they did in the twentieth century, members of the political faith, like Jimmy Carter, Noan Chomsky, Michael Moore, and Tom Hayden, once again reached out to bloodthirsty tyrants bent on human destruction."

http://www.WhatTheWestNeedsToKnow.com

That the American Left has been guilty of this moral treason to their birthright is by now a well known story. Too well known, in fact—as witnessed by Carter's abandonment of the Shah of Iran, Chomsky's gloating about 9/11, Moore's paean to the Cuban dictator, and Hayden's constitutional treason in North Vietnam. Other equally immoral conduct by prominent Americans abounds.

http://AgendaDocumentary.com

What is not as well known, however, is found in the promise of Dr. Glazov's Preface's last sentence: "This book," he writes, "is dedicated to exploring the reasons why" (my emphasis). He wants to understand "the impulses that stimulate the radical mind and that have led to its love affair with radical Islam"—an assignment which, if accomplished successfully, will be of inestimable value.

The author's exploration of this crucially important distinction—— between the that of Americans repudiating individual rights and democracy, and the why of their aberrant, contra-intuitive behavior—— can provide intellectuals and activists alike with a powerful weapon in the fight against America's enemies.

Several themes which explain the why are developed at far greater length than can be explicated here. For example, in Chapter Two Dr. Glazov identifies that "the believer's totalitarian journey begins with an acute sense of alienation from his own society." He expands this identification with the realization that at bottom his "believers" are collectivists:

"In rejecting his own society, the believer spurns the values of democracy and individual freedom, which are anathema to him, since he has miserably failed to cope with both the challenges they pose and the possibilities they offer. Tortured by his personal alienation, which is accompanied by feelings of self-loathing, the believer craves a fairy-tale world where no individuality exists, and where human estrangement is thus impossible. The believer fantasizes about how his own individuality and self will be submerged within the collective whole."

A related theme is how personal alienation, and thus the need to belong to “something bigger than oneself,” ideally populated by co-victims, is related to guilt, the need for power, and its worship in the hands of a strongman: Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Castro, Ho, Pol Pot, Saddam, Arafat.

A related theme is how personal alienation, and thus the need to belong to “something bigger than oneself,” ideally populated by co-victims, is related to guilt, the need for power, and its worship in the hands of a strongman: Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Castro, Ho, Pol Pot, Saddam, Arafat.

In his telling of the why, Dr. Glazov’s narrative covers vast territory: apologist pilgrims to the hellholes of the Soviet Union, Red China, North Vietnam and Communist Cuba; their reigning despots’ savage repression of individual rights and human dignity; the nature and goals of death-cult Islam; twenty-first century terrorism; and more.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=cj0Id3BLFco&feature=related

And at the core of the alienation, self-hatred, envy, fear, and other-hatred are the warped psychologies of the supplicants who through the years have worshiped at the feet of the modern world’s most monstrous figures, while the streets are awash with blood and the lands fill with corpses. All, they say, in the name of peace, brotherhood and a promised utopia that is to be achieved by mass murder of innocent men, women and children.

Dr. Jamie Glazov has written a very important, impeccably sourced and beautifully written book. As promised, it explains the why which motivates some human beings to eschew life and instead worship death—all in the name of filling, through death and destruction, the self-caused void in their own souls.

United in Hate is a cautionary tale. Unless its message is heard, and acted upon, that death and destruction will continue to metastasize until freedom is dealt a blow from which it may not recover.

1903. Ryon Gambill, His Abuser, Bohle, Castrated in Prison

Newsgroup: rec.radio.shortwave
Date: 2010-10-24 20:07:28 UTC
From: Anne Onime <anonymous@rip.ax.lt>
Message-ID: <92d35a31c0793d93c02ac557e952ff5a@rip.ax.lt>
Source record: 210943

Ryon Gambill is a convicted arsonist.

Ryon Gambill operates Marauder Corporation.

Ryon Gambill was brutalized by a gang headed by Jarriatt Bohle.

Bohle was sentenced to 30 years in prison.

In 2008, Bohle was castrated in his cell by unknown persons using shards of glass.

Appellant became upset with Gambill and directed Alexander to bring Gambill to Alexander's apartment. The reason for appellant's anger was that Gambill had allegedly turned him in to the police and appellant claimed that as a result he lost a Mercedes-Benz, $50,000 and other property. On December 15, 1994, Alexander sent several of his roommates, including Jonathan Harrell, who testified as an accomplice, to find Gambill and bring him to the apartment. Five people returned with Gambill. Alexander ordered Gambill to strip off his clothes, made him lie face-down on a weight bench, and ordered Jonathan Harrell to tie him to the bench. During the entire event Gambill was crying and repeatedly said he did not want to die. Alexander hit Gambill on the legs with a bar several times. This was a closet bar made of a thick wooden dowel about two feet long. Alexander hit Gambill with the club several times on the back of his legs at the knees and kept asking him why he had turned appell ant in to the police. After beating Gambill for a while, Alexander ordered Harrell to call appellant on the phone; appellant then came to the apartment. Appellant directed that Gambill be untied and placed in a chair. Appellant put a knife to Gambill's throat and asked why he had turned him in to the police. Appellant hit Gambill in the face with his fists several times. Appellant poured lighter fluid over Gambill's body as Gambill cried, "Please don't burn me." He had no clothes on, was crying and scared. Appellant told Gambill that he owed appellant a lot of money and in order to pay it back he had to prostitute himself. Appellant demanded $100 by 10:00 p.m. and threatened to hurt Gambill's girlfriend if he did not pay within the time ordered by appellant. Gambill was allowed to dress and left the apartment with some of his captors, who took him to a telephone to make dates to sell sexual services.

J. D. Torres, a patrol officer with the Indio Police Department, testified that he encountered Gambill on December 15, 1994, at about 5:30 p.m. in the Montrose area. Gambill was limping and had bruises on his arms and legs. He declined Torres's offer to call an ambulance and said he would see his own physician.

Pedro Jimenez, a friend of appellant's, testified that on the next day, December 16, appellant told him that he had gone to Alexander's place where Gambill was tied up, and that he beat him and let him go afterwards. Jimenez also testified that later that evening Hesper Castro came to Charlie's, a restaurant frequented by appellant and his associates, to report to appellant that she had seen Gambill talking to the police. Appellant was not there so she called him at home. Later that night Jimenez went to appellant's house; appellant was very angry at Gambill. Appellant told Jimenez that he was going to have

Alexander find Gambill and hold him for appellant.

Jimenez testified that on December 19, Jeremiah Sandoval and Jarriatt Bohle came to Charlie's and talked to him. They told him that they planned to make charms out of Gambill's body parts, such as his ears. At trial, in response to the question of whether he had any further conversation with any of those individuals that day, the nineteenth, Jimenez testified: "I called Jason [appellant] and he said that they had Rudy [Gambill] tied up and that they were beating him."

It is not clear exactly what happened between the first kidnaping on the 15th and the next, which occurred the 19th and 20th of December, and probably began earlier. Gambill was conditionally released to make money for appellant by prostituting himself. At some point on or after December 16, Gambill was taken back to the apartment and was initially assaulted by co-defendants Bohle and Sandoval and possibly others. Jonathan Harrell testified that Bohle told him that he had bitten Gambill's nose and that Sandoval told him he had kicked Gambill in the head because Gambill had lied to appellant about having given money due appellant to Bohle and Sandoval. This got them in trouble with appellant, who had assaulted them and threatened them with a knife. Bohle claimed that appellant had bitten his nose, and that was the reason Bohle bit Gambill's nose.

Annette Thomas, an Emergency Medical Technician with the Indio Fire Department, testified that she responded to a call to the 600 block of Westheimer at 7:53 p.m. on December 19th. She found a group of teenagers waiting with Rudy Gambill, who had been the victim of an assault. After Gambill was in the ambulance, co-defendant Kim Edwards got into the cab of the ambulance and said that she would accompany him to the hospital. During the ride to Riverside Hospital, however, Gambill informed the EMT that he was trying to get away from the people in that group. Ms. Thomas noticed that Gambill's face was very red. He had a laceration on his neck and bruises to his body. He had also sustained two bites to the backs of his calves. Thomas delivered Gambill to an examination room. Kim Edwards wanted to go with him, but the hospital personnel would not allow her in the room. Jonathan Harrell testified that Alexander sent him and one of Harrell's brothers to the hospital to see about bri nging Gambill back, but when they got there he had already been discharged. Kim Edwards brought Gambill back to the apartment late that evening.

After Kim Edwards returned the victim to Alexander's apartment, the beating and torture intensified. Among those present and participating in the torture were the individuals convicted in the joint trial with appellant: Darrold Alexander, Kim Edwards, Jeremiah Sandoval, Jarriatt Bohle, and Timothy Lathrop. Alexander smashed Gambill's head into the wall and knocked a hole in the wall. Alexander used a metal exercise bar to beat the victim on the head and body. He used a "sleeper hold" to squeeze Gambill's neck until the victim lost consciousness and when he let his body drop, Gambill's head hit on the corner of the weight bench. Jonathan Harrell saw Timothy Lathrop kick Gambill in the head and face three times with heavy boots. He kicked him so hard his body went across the room and blood splattered on the walls. One witness, Cheryl Branch, saw Gambill lying in the middle of the floor naked and burned. His face was bloody and swollen, his nose was dangling by a piece of skin a nd he had no hair on his head. His genital area was severely burned. Alexander was hitting the victim with a metal bar while he, Kim Edwards, Timothy Lathrop, Jarriatt Bohle, Jeremiah Sandoval and another man kicked Gambill in the head, ribs, genital area, legs and arms. Bohle, Sandoval, and the other man had on heavy boots. The torture would go for a while, then Gambill would be dragged over to a small closet, referred to as "the hole," and stuffed into it. A heavy bookcase was moved to block escape from the closet. After a period of time he would be brought out and the beating and other torture would resume. During the time Gambill was being held and tortured, the participants shouted at him a lot about why had he "snitched off" appellant and Alexander.

Jonathan Harrell saw Alexander pour lighter fluid on Gambill's body and set him on fire. Alexander and another person directed hair spray through the flame of a cigarette lighter and made a flame thrower to burn the victim's body. Other flammable liquids, including fingernail polish remover and hair remover, were poured onto Gambill and lighted.

At one point, Alexander took the wooden dowel and inserted it into Gambill's rectum. Then Alexander had someone heat up an electric curling iron and with Timothy Lathrop, Jarriatt Bohle and another man holding Gambill, Alexander inserted the hot curling iron into his rectum. Cheryl Branch was not in the same room and did not see the iron being applied, but she saw the iron plugged in and heating up, she heard the victim screaming and begging Alexander not to stick the curling iron into his rectum, and she could smell the burning flesh and hear the sizzling each of the three times it was inserted. Those present in the room while this was being done to Gambill included Jeremiah Sandoval, Jarriatt Bohle, Kim Edwards, Timothy Lathrop, Darrold Alexander, and at least two others.

Gambill was put back in the closet and later brought out and seated in a chair. Cheryl Branch saw Alexander, Jeremiah Sandoval, Kim Edwards, Timothy Lathrop, Jarriatt Bohle and another man around the chair. Alexander poured lighter fluid on Gambill's genital area and lit it with a cigarette lighter. Sandoval and Bohle and another man poured water on Gambill's head. Then they poured bleach over his head, chest and genital area while Gambill screamed.

Gambill was "flopping like a fish, like he was having seizures," and passing in and out of consciousness. Alexander directed Kim Edwards to call appellant for transportation and to tell him that Alexander did not know what to do with Gambill. Jonathan Harrell and Joseph Hurd, another accomplice witness who testified at the punishment phase, put a shirt and sweat pants on the victim. He screamed with pain. Then Alexander, Kim Edwards, Jeremiah Sandoval, Jarriatt Bohle, Timothy Lathrop, Joseph Hurd and three other men left the apartment carrying Gambill. The plan at that time was to take Gambill to a waterfall near the Galleria, inject him with lighter fluid and throw his body in the water. The group returned without Gambill and reported that they had an encounter with the police and had lied to them about getting a phone call to come get their friend who had gotten drunk and passed out on the side of the road. The police had called an ambulance to take Gambill for medical care

Deputy Constable John Karrer testified that he saw a group of people at 3:00 a.m. on the morning of December 21 and stopped to talk to them. Kim Edwards told him that they were helping a friend who had gotten drunk and passed out on the side of the road. The deputy asked to see the friend, and was pointed to a pile of jackets on the side of the road. He looked into the pile for a person and discovered Gambill's bruised and lacerated face. The deputy called for an ambulance. He uncovered the rest of the victim's body and found large burns around the groin. He then called for assistance from the Indio Police Department. When the deputy asked Kim Edwards about the injuries, she acted surprised. The others suggested that it was a case of gay bashing. Members of the group told the authorities conflicting and changing stories.

Gambill underwent exploratory surgery and was found to have a bruised left kidney and pancreas. A doctor testified as to his examination of other injuries to the victim. Gambill was disoriented and confused, his eyes were swollen shut and his lips were swollen. He had multiple cuts and bruises on his face. His nose had an unusual curved laceration that penetrated the entire thickness of the nose. The injury could have been caused by a human bite. He had two black eyes, indicating a baseline skull fracture. A CAT scan revealed air in the brain space and multiple fractures of most of the bones in the face and skull. He had second and third degree burns on his chest, neck, lower abdomen, legs, buttocks, and groin. These were thermic chemical burns and could have been caused by lighting a flammable liquid. A rectal examination revealed second and third degree burns along the rectum and the anal canal. Because this skin is so sensitive, the burns were excruciatingly painful. The e xamining doctor determined that Gambill would have died within a few days if he had not received medical treatment. Gambill began receiving psychiatric treatment early in 1995. He was diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder, and was severely impaired in his ability to function in everyday life. He did not testify at the trial.

Here are just three examples of left-wing statements 100 times more outrageous than what Juan Williams said, with no reaction from NPR:

"I think he ought to be worried about what's going on in the Good Lord's mind, because if there is retributive justice, he'll get AIDS from a transfusion, or one of his grandchildren will get it."

-- National Public Radio and ABC News reporter Nina Totenberg reacting to Senator Jesse Helms' claim that the government spends too much on AIDS research, July 8, 1995 Inside Washington.

"The Rapture, and I quote, 'is the immediate departure from this Earth of over four million people in less than a fifth of a second,' unquote. This happily-volatilized mass of the saved were born again in Jesus Christ....The evaporation of four million people who believe this crap would leave the world an instantly better place."

-- New Orleans-based National Public Radio commentator Andrei Codrescu, December 19, 1995 All Things Considered.

MARGARET CARLSON: And wouldn’t it be a great thing if they moved it a to each other. Let’s compromise.

MICHEL MARTIN (NPR): Why should they move it?

CARLSON: Well, why don’t we compromise?

MARTIN (NPR): Did anybody move a Catholic church? Did anybody move a Christian church after Timothy McVeigh – who adhered to a cultic, white supremacist cultic version of Christianity – bombed the Murrah

George Soros’ Millions Buying ‘Political Reporters’ for NPR

Juan Williams's firing from National Public Radio (NPR) earlier this week was not only animated in part by the liberal George Soros-backed radio network's disdain of Fox News, it also reeks of a double standard, NewsBusters publisher Brent Bozell told viewers of Friday's "Fox & Friends" program.

"If [Juan Williams] had said those words on the Charlie Rose show, it would have been seen as provocative or thoughtful.... This is the same network that featured Nina Totenberg hoping that Senator Jesse Helms would die or one of his grandchildren would die of AIDS because of his position on gay rights and nothing ever happened to her."

http://media.eyeblast.org/newsbusters/static/2010/10/2010-10-22-FNC-FF-Bozell.mp3

"[Senator Helms] ought to be worried about what's going on in the Good Lord's mind, because if there's retributive justice, he'll get AIDS from a transfusion or one of his grandchildren will get it," the NPR correspondent said on the July 8, 1995 edition of "Inside Washington," a DC-area current events discussion program.

What's more, while Williams was dismissed for his supposed insensitivity to millions of American Muslims, NPR issued no disciplinary action for a contributor who, back in 1995, mocked Christians who believe in the rapture of the church at the second coming of Christ:

"The evaporation of four million people who believe this crap [the Rapture] would leave the world an instantly better place," New Orleans-based National Public Radio commentator Andrei Codrescu said on the December 19, 1995 edition of "All Things Considered."

"There were 40,000 complaints waged against him," Bozell noted, and "nothing was done," contrasted with just 60 complaints waged against Juan Williams's statement on Monday's "O'Reilly Factor."

A new PBS web-based cartoon series that preaches to kids about environmentalism and the dangers of consumerism is being funded in part by the Environmental Protection Agency.

“Loop Scoops,” an animated show created by liberal environmental activist and anti-Capitalist Annie Leonard, features elementary school-aged characters who learn that video game devices are “toxic” and that juice boxes are ecological “weapons” that will eventually destroy the planet.

I took my excellent little portable Grundig G8 with me on holiday to Malta(Malta is an island sixty km's off the coast of Sicily). On the hotel room balcony it performed surprisingly well with very little RFI to blot out the faint signals.
Shortwave had disappointingly little to offer - seems no one is broadcasting to Europe on SW anymore. A pity.

However the Mediumwave AM BC band proved interesting and I got a lot of stations that I was quite chuffed with.
Five English stations some 2100km's/1300 miles away from the hotel.
648 BBC Orfordness
1089 Talk Sport Brookmans Park
1215 Absolute Radio
1458 Sunrise Radio London
1548 "Gold" London
Nice catches barefoot on the tiny G8

Also:
621 Wavre Belgium
Eight German stations
1440 Luxembourg
Ten French stations
The difficult "Big L" from Holland on 1395, also ID'ing as "Mighty KBC"

Of course the band was full of Italian stations that are just close by, but carefully working the band after sunrise, when the Italians faded, it was possible to get the distant English, German and French stations = great fun.
As the hotel overlooks the sea, it was evident that the sea "gain effect" was strongly evident, as the distant signals persisted until well after sunrise.

Have fun and good DX

Just looked at the NYPost-aka- FoxyNews video and article. Most of them (shown to us) are so corroded and beyond recognition that calling them "live" is utterly a joke. The water here is very salty and the find was located only at a depth of 20 feet . It is amazing anything is left after 50+ years- local crabs are REALLY able to chew up just about anything down there at the bottom !

BURR,

The American AM & FM Broadcasters to some degree feel they got burned by IBOC "HD" Radio Scheme.

The NASB is most likely looking at FCC and International Pressure to start some Shortwave Broadcasting using DRM.

The NASB would like to know / what to know if the present
Shortwave Radio Listeners will follow and BUY New Shortwave
Radios that feature DRM ???

Me thinks that the average Age {Demographics} of Shortwave Radio Listeners (SWLs) and those who are willing to spend the Extra $150 for a new DRM Shortwave Radio are small and getting smaller.

NOTE - Above the $150 Cost Range : Gets people to think that a PC/Internet and Satellite is the better deal for the Added Price; and gives better quality Audio plus Video too.

IF The Shortwave Radio Broadcasters of the World with Government Backing could make and market a 'portable'
AM & FM Shortwave Radio like the Redsun RP2100 Radio
{C Crane SW} for under US$100 then there would be a World-Wide Market for DRM Shortwave Broadcasters.
http://www.ccrane.com/images/large/ccradio-sw.jpg http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/portable/2100.html
http://www.radiointel.com/review-redsunrp2100.htm

NOTE - Not a 12 kHz IF-Output Jack to hook-up to a PC to Decode the DRM Signal -but- Real Built-In DRM in the Radio itself. {no extra techie required}
-aka- Just Turn It 'On' and Listen
-wrt- Free Over-the-Air Radio*
* AM/FM/SW Radio + AC/DC Power + You-the-Listener

IMHO - Without a low-cost 'Affordable' DRM 'portable' AM & FM Shortwave Radio designed for the World Market {Available in every Country} there is NO Future for DRM Broadcasting.

IBOC has the 'possibility' of HD-Radio "Installs" in many/most New American Cars & Trucks to act as a Decade Long passive transitioning modus : While DRM Shortwave has No Means To It's End of Gaining General SWL Acceptance and becoming the Average Shortwave Radio Listener's

'normal' way of Receiving Shortwave Radio Broadcasts.

PLUS Real Time World-Wide "Audio Content" that was Exclusive to Shortwave Radio Broadcasting is now available via several other forms of Audio and Video Media Transmission : Satellite, Internet, Cellphone, etc ::: The Combination of Audio and Video Media is simply more compelling then Audio Along and Shortwave Radio Broadcasting is simply Audio Along.

It's the old story of the Railroads seeing themselves as railroads and not Transportation Companies : Therefore NOT Using their Economic Might to Get Into the Airline Business and Dominate
It early-on.

Many/Most Government/National Shortwave Radio Broadcasters are NOW! Government/National Media Distributors -via- Satellite Radio & TV; Internet Radio & TV; Cellphone PodCast; and oh yes... some still do some Shortwave Radio Broadcasting too...

Those reports are misleading. They are raising the lowest age at which you can begin receiving benefits from 60 to 62 (same as here in the USA).

Your "liberal media" intentionally distorts the news like this as a matter of routine. You have to be sharp, suspicious and situationally aware at all times or you will lose. This is war.

By Rich Trzupek On October 22, 2010

Juan Williams put it simply: “I was fired for telling the truth.” That’s about as succinct a summary of the situation as you’re likely to find. NPR CEO Vivian Schiller terminated Williams’ contract because he veered off of the leftist reservation, and to make things even worse from Shiller’s point of view, he did it on Fox. If Williams is one of the tens of millions of Americans who gets nervous when he’s around people dressed in Muslim garb, NPR believes that he ought not mention it, or – as Schiller said [1] – he should discuss his problems with “his psychiatrist or his publicist.” Schiller would eventually apologize for that demeaning insult, but it’s far too late for NPR to recover from this fiasco. Liberals, conservatives and even some Muslim groups expressed shock and disgust over this assault on free speech and open discussion.

Williams’ sin, according to NPR, was that expressing his personal feelings [2] violated NPR’s code of conduct that forbids their on-air talent from taking a position on “controversial issues,” from participating “…in shows that encourage punditry and speculation rather than fact-based analysis” and from expressing opinions on other shows that “…they would not air in their role as an NPR journalist.” At least that’s the official version, as expressed in an internal memo [3] that Schiller wrote explaining her decision. One suspects that the Council on American Islamic Relations had something to do with it as well. CAIR was outraged by Williams’ remarks [4]. In a statement, CAIR said that “NPR should address the fact that one of its news analysts seems to believe that all airline passengers who are perceived to be Muslim can legitimately be viewed as security threats.”

Well, yeah. Political correctness may demand that we subject 80 year-old Swedish grandmothers to the same level of scrutiny at the airport that we do to young Muslim males, but we know – beyond doubt – which demographic represents a potential threat and which does not. Tarek Fatah, founder of the Muslim Canadian Congress, acknowledged this basic truth, pointing to the fact that most victims of Islamic terrorism are Muslims and that even a Muslim woman wearing a burka is a potential threat. “We are victims of these guys. A number of suicide bombers who have attacked have killed people [while] wearing the burka,” Fatah said. “This is the truth, we should be speaking the truth rather than what people expect us to say.” Yet, NPR cut Juan Williams loose for expressing his personal opinion, and – worse – for expressing a personal opinion that is entirely reasonable and rests on a solid foundation of fact.

This is another example of what the left has become [5]. They are, to paraphrase William F. Buckley, interested in your opinion so long as that opinion dovetails with their worldview. They're not liberals, not even remotely in the classical sense. Classical liberalism encouraged debate and welcomed the intellectual enrichment that grew out of discussions of opposing viewpoints. The left, of which NPR is unquestionably a part, believes that it is the sole gatekeeper of truth, thus removing any obligation to consider other views. Even if Vivian Schiller's hypothesis were true – that NPR personalities don't opine, only guests on their programs do – it would not matter. Somebody has to choose what guests to interview. Somebody has to decide on the questions to ask them. Somebody has to figure out which interviews NPR will feature and how to edit them. All of these decisions involve people who have personal opinions about the way the world works and their decisions reflect it. If you've spent any time listening to NPR, you can't have any doubt that the people making those editorial decisions are leftist through and through. Thus, their demand that on-air personalities remain "neutral" is meaningless. NPR, like every other media outlet, is not neutral. The decision-makers have an agenda, at NPR and everywhere. The difference between NPR and outlets like Fox and MSNBC is that taxpayers fund NPR's ideological bent, instead of letting the free market figure it out.

Williams' appearances on Fox have annoyed the left for a long time, which is odd considering the fact that the left constantly berates Fox for being too one-sided. It's beyond disingenuous to suggest that Williams was stoking the fires of what the left considers to be irrational Islamophobia during his discussion with Bill O'Reilly. In a passionate defense [6] of his actions published at Fox News Williams wrote: "I made it clear that all Americans have to be careful not to let fears lead to violation of anyone's constitutional rights, be it to build a mosque, carry the Koran or drive a New York cab without fear having your throat slashed. Bill and I argued after I said he has to take care in the way he talks about the 9/11 attacks so as not to provoke bigotry.

This was an honest, sensitive debate hosted by O'Reilly." These are not the words of a racist, these are rather the sober thoughts of a man who has devoted a large portion of his life to fighting racism. His conclusion, that "…there is no doubt that there's a real war and people are trying to kill us" is ultimately what caused NPR, CAIR and so much of the left to be so deeply distressed. It's bad enough when "right wing nut-jobs" point out such obvious facts, how dare one of their own jump on the bandwagon.

"…[M]y comments on "The O'Reilly Factor" are being distorted by the self-righteous ideological, left-wing leadership at NPR," Williams wrote. "They are taking bits and pieces of what I said to go after me for daring to have a conversation with leading conservative thinkers. They loathe the fact that I appear on Fox News. They don't notice that I am challenging Bill O'Reilly and trading ideas with Sean Hannity. In their hubris they think by talking with O'Reilly or Hannity I am lending them legitimacy. Believe me, Bill O'Reilly (and Sean, too) is a major force in American culture and politics whether or not I appear on his show."

When the left drives a fellow like Juan Williams, a man who subscribes to their way of thinking in so many ways, out of their camp they've done nothing but to make themselves all the more irrelevant. Like that other bastion of left-wing heterodoxy, Media Matter For America [7], NPR has shown that it's ready and willing to write off anyone who doesn't subscribe to their version of "Goodthink" in the slightest particular. According to NPR policy, "…NPR journalists should not express views they would not air in their role as an NPR journalist." , NPR has shown that it's ready and willing to write off anyone who doesn't subscribe to their version of "Goodthink" in the slightest particular. According to NPR policy, "…NPR journalists should not express views they would not air in their role as an NPR journalist." Williams relates that his boss at NPR, Ellen Weiss, specifically asked him if he would have expressed his opinion regarding Muslims on NPR. "I said yes," Williams wrote "because in keeping with my values I will tell people the truth about feelings and opinions." Apparently telling the truth about your feelings and opinions doesn't matter at NPR, at least if those feelings and opinions aren't in rigid lockstep with this tax-payer funded, left-wing media outlet's game-plan.

1954. How Public Is NPR's Funding?

De-fund NPR! In the wake of the firing of Juan Williams by National Public Radio, we've once again heard conservative voices issue that call. NPR representatives respond, as they always do when their dependence on government purse strings is noted, by arguing that only two or three percent of the service's money comes from the federal government. NPR apologist Norah O'Donnell recently threw out a one- to three-percent figure on MSNBC.

Norah's New Math Grossly Understates NPR's Fed Funding
http://www.newsbusters.org/blogs/mark-finkelstein/2010/10/22/norahs-new-math-grossly-understates-nprs-fed-funding

We don't see these people volunteering to give up that three percent, but we have to admit that this amount of funding is not the gigantic boondoggle we might prefer to oppose. Is this three-percent number a fair claim by the NPR crowd? Apparently, in a very limited sense, it is, but in a more comprehensive analysis, it is nowhere near accurate.

To understand NPR funding, we have to recognize that public radio is a two-tier operation. There is, on the one hand, the network itself, the Washington-based producer of programs that actually terminated Juan Williams' contract. On the other hand, there is the collection of some nine hundred NPR affiliate radio stations who bring this programming to radios around the United States. We cannot hope to understand NPR's finances without understanding the stations as well, so let's begin there.

According to information available from the NPR website, http://www.npr.org/about/aboutnpr/publicradiofinances.html local radio station money comes from the following sources:

32.1% Individual contributions

21.1% Business contributions

13.6% University funds

10.1% Corporation for Public Broadcasting funds

9.6% Foundation money

5.6% Federal, state, and local government funds

7.6% Other

At first glance, this distribution of funds seems to confirm that public radio's support does not come in large amounts from the direct allocation of tax moneys. After all, 5.6% is not a gigantic portion of the budget, is it? But let's look more closely. That 10.1% that comes from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting is 99% provided by -- you guessed it -- the federal government. Those university funds, whenever they are provided by a public university, represent taxpayer-provided dollars. We can safely assert that three out of four university-supported stations are publicly funded, which means that more than 10% (three-quarters of that 13.6%) is taken from the taxpayer's pockets.

So far, we find that NPR member stations count on direct or indirect taxpayer money for some 25% of their funds -- and that's before we consider some of the largest portions of their budgets.

Obviously the support by individuals, businesses, and foundations does not constitute taxpayer funding, right? Not so fast. These donations are tax-deductible; thus, they are subsidized by the government. Granted, not every gift is actually reflected on an individual or business tax return, and not all of those that are itemized wind up offsetting high marginal tax rates. Still, it is reasonable to believe that on average, these gifts result in deductions at the 25% tax bracket. Since these three categories add up to roughly 64% of station funds, we can reasonably argue that 16% of that money (64% x 0.25) is subsidized by the tax code.

In the end, then, local NPR affiliates derive something like 41% of their funding from taxes, either directly or indirectly.

What about the entity that generated all the buzz for firing Juan Williams? Interestingly, despite their conflicting 2% and 3% claims, the NPR website says, "We receive no direct federal funding for operations." Of course, that sort of statement leaves open the possibility of receiving direct federal funding for other purposes. What are those? They don't volunteer that information easily. What they do point out prominently is that the biggest source of money is from member stations. Local stations pay dues and fees for the programs they rebroadcast. This money, recorded as Station Programming Fees (40%), Membership Dues (1%), and Distribution Services (8%), accounts for nearly half of NPR's funds.

Why is this significant? You do recall that some 41% of local station money came from taxpayers, right? If 50% of funding comes from money that is 40% derived from taxes, then another 20% of NPR's budget comes, indirectly, from taxpayers. Twenty percent! That's a long way from the 2%-3% figures, isn't it?

The next huge chunk of NPR income comes from "Sponsorships." These are the things that, in any other media outlet, would be called advertisements. We could argue that sponsorship money is tax-deductible and therefore partly taxpayer-funded, but, lest we look like double-standard-wielding lefties, we would have to make the same argument for the ads that car companies run on ABC and CBS. Let's face it: virtually every large corporation in America enjoys some form of government largesse. That's what happens when government tentacles reach into all portions of our lives.

On the other hand, there is much more clarity when we look to the 10% "Grants and Contributions" category that represents direct taxpayer gifting (most prominently by way of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting) and indirect taxpayer support by way of tax deductions. Is it reasonable to say that half of that 10% comes in one way or another from taxes? I think so, but I'll settle for saying that this category adds just 3% to the total. This brings our total of taxpayer support for the entire NPR budget to around 23%.

Given that only 89% of the NPR income pie comes from external sources (the rest coming from investment returns), it is not unreasonable to assert that more than 25% of NPR funds from outside sources actually comes from taxpayers. That's not an overwhelming portion of the budget, but it's a long way from two to three percent.

As annoying as I find the bias at MSNBC or the New York Times, I will respect to the end their right to be as biased as they'd like. What they do with their money and whatever funds they can convince advertisers to kick in is their own business. The same does not apply to the likes of NPR. That's your money and my money going into their coffers and funding that unbalanced message. We need to demand that NPR either be pushed away from the public trough or be required to present a modicum of evenhandedness.

- that lacks DRM capability.

Steve,

IF Like XM/Sirius Satellite Radio DRM could come up with a simple uniform Plug-and-Play Box.

Like the XM Receiver/Antenna for the Eton E1-XM Radio that would be a good 'bridge' between an old non-DRM Radio and an Integrated DRM Radio.

The Shortwave Radio Broadcasters have to see some ROI coming out of DRM; or they simply will move on to the Internet Radio & TV and Satellite Radio & TV as their main Technical Means to Their End of Reaching and Communicating with People All Around the World.

1. Reduce heater's room temperature For each extra degree (Celsius) of temperature, your heater will consume 7 to 11% more energy. Adjust it to 18degrees which is also better for your health.
2. Install a programmable thermostat
You will be able to control the heater's temperature during specific hours every day.
3. Insulate your house
Loss of heat is loss of energy.
4. Fix air leaks
5. Close the chimney of the fireplace when you don't use it
It is designed to drive smoke (hot air) out of the house!
6. Get an energy audit to advice you about the necessary fixes and insulation
7. Install energy efficient windows
8. Install storm windows
In cold climates they may save up to 50% of energy loss of your current windows during the winter.
9. Shade the windows properly
A tent outside the window will prevent more solar energy to enter the house that a curtain.
10.Plant deciduous trees to shade your house.
During the winter they will loose their leaves and allow sunlight penetrate the house.
11.Mount aluminum sheets behind your space heaters
It will reflect the thermal energy in the room, not on the wall.
12.Put the refrigerator far from any heat sources
13.Don't overload the fridge
14.Don't put hot food in the fridge.
It will drain energy for no reason. Leave it out until it gets to the room temperature before putting it in the fridge.
15.Tidy up your fridge
Firstly, you will need less time with the door open until you find what you need.
Secondly, the frost will be distributed better.
16.Keep your fridge clean
You can save up to 30% of loss of energy by cleaning the dust from the back of your refrigerator. Also, clean it from the ice which reduces its performance.

17.Switch off the lights where you don't need them
18.Use CFLs
Compact Fluorescent Light bulbs are way more economic. Save up to 70% of electricity costs for lighting.
19. Look for Energy Star qualified appliances 20.Use the “eco” mode to reduce your appliances electricity consumption
21.Don't use the air-conditioner with the windows open 22.Clean the air-conditioner's filters regularly
23.Shade your air-conditioner's compressors properly
They will use 10% less energy.
24.Walk, walk, walk
Walk to the supermarket, walk to the school, walk and save energy.
25.Drive slower to reduce emissions Aggressive driving consumes more fuel.
26.Don't pre-heat the car engine.
Instead, you can drive at low velocities during the first minutes until the engine is properly heated.
27.Keep your car tires pressure at the proposed limits.
This will save you fuels and it will make your car safer too.
28.Go Hybrid
Hybrid cars produce less greenhouse gases. Check out the local funds and buy one at a better price
OR
29.Buy an electric car
30.Use public means of transport
31.Buy proper cookware Make sure that your pans and the other kitchenware fix properly on the cooker.
Otherwise you will loose energy for no reason.
32.Turn the cooker off before the food is finished
It will remain hot for a little and the food will be cooked without wasting any energy.
33.Don't use a cloth dryer
It consumes too much energy. Remember, sun can be a really good friend if used properly.
34.Wash your clothes on lower temperature
Avoid energy loss when possible.
35.Don't leave electronics on stand-by mode
They will not stop using electricity. Use a plug-board with a switch to completely switch off all appliances.
36.Say no to screen savers
Turn the monitor off instead.
37.A plugged charger will consume energy even when it is not connected to the

38.Go Local Avoid transportation to far away distances if you can do the same thing nearby.
Choose a local supermarket, buy from the bakery of the neighborhood.
Also prefer local products to reduce the CO2 emissions cause to their transportation.
39.Go On-line
Make your bank or any other transactions using the Internet. This will save you time and transportation costs too.
40.Don't use the microwave oven to defrost food Instead, you can just leave it at room temperature for a little bit longer.
41.Go Passive
Using the sun properly can save you lots of money.
42.Use solar water heaters
They provide free hot water.
43.Maintain your water heater regularly
Badly maintained heaters consume way more electricity.
44.Insulate your water pipes
45.Install a Green Roof
It will save you lots of energy along with multiple other advantages it provides.

You can be fired for anything -- any reason. If you feel aggrieved, you might try to sue, but good luck on that. The burden of proof is on the eomployee and the vast majority of suits for wrongful dimissal go right down the toilet. The general law is that as a wage earner all your employer owes you is the pay for the hours worked. As it stands, Williams hasn't any grounds whatsoever to claim wrongful dismissal.
Now, had he been fired for trying to organize a union, he might have some grounds for reinstatement, but nothing he did was that heroic. He was fired for expressing a gross prejudice towards a large class of individuals. No court in the country wouldtake his complaint seriously.

Why does Rightardia care about this, anyway? None of you give a flying damn for Williams. Is it just to put a stick in NPR's eye? Why? NPR has faithfully reported on and given voice to conservative viewpoints throughout the years. I would think you Rightards would appreciate having your viewpoints elevated to the level of semi-intelligent thought.

CAIR can say whatever it wants, but Juan Williams brazenly violated NPR policy and he was fired for it. It's that simple. Williams abandoned journalism for inane punditry and he paid the price for it.
He was fired for the same reason an employee of a high end scotch whiskey maker would get fired if he was caught appearing in a TV spot for Jerry's Bathtub Gin.

FWIW -imho- At NPR Juan Williams often was

The Saudi legal system prescribes capital punishment or corporal punishment, including amputations of hands and feet for certain crimes such as murder, robbery, rape, drug smuggling, homosexual activity, and adultery. Theft is also punishable by amputation of the hand, although it is rarely prescribed for a first offense. The courts may impose other harsh punishments, such as floggings, for less serious crimes against public morality such as drunkenness.[16] Murder, accidental death and bodily harm are open to punishment from the victim's family. Retribution may be sought in kind or through blood money. The blood money payable for a woman's accidental death, or that of a Christian male [17] is half as much as that for a Muslim male.[18] All others (Hindus, Buddhists, and Sikhs) are valued at 1/16th.

In the last two years, newscorp has purchased many world media assets in his ongoing quest. He has also tried to shut down several country's public broadcasting systems in an attempt to replace them with newscorp controlled companies. (check out his European operations and the BBC)

Would seem to me that if he can control the USA as effectively as he has, he could control other countries that are less sophisticated much easier.

Why are americans so damn eager to sell the country out to foreigners to a guy who has most all his non-media assets in foreign countries? Why are republicans assisting him? How do you think the GOP will pay back Rupert?

Most high profile companies taking personal services contracts with their front people have a number of morals and behaviour clauses built into those contracts. They include things like termination for drug use, alcoholism, and on and off the job behaviour. Anything that may bring embarrassment, shame, or derision reflected on the company.

Though I personally think there was nothing wrong with what Williams said, and that it's long since time that someone finally say it out loud, he said it in a prominent and public way. And, ironically, on a network with a larger audience than NPR. Should this clash with NPR's policies, and the limits of Williams' contract (which it looks like it certainly did, given Soros' public and personal funding of NPR political hires recently revealed), Williams would have been justifiably gone before the words died in the room.

Such clauses are not new. Henry Ford had some non-tobacco, and non-alcohol use clauses in his employees' work agreements, and these extended to off site use, like home and recreational use as well. Ford workers could be fired for smoking at home.

Scarborough said to Garrett that Williams had only been fired from NPR because he works for Fox News. Garrett agreed with Scarborough, saying he had talked with Williams about the blowback he was getting from NPR listeners over his appearances on Fox News. He also said that NPR's anger at Williams' association with Fox News was reflective of the polarization in the American media something he said neither Fox nor NPR wanted to solve. Indeed, he said, Fox News thrives on that polarization:

"For a certain amount of marketing points of view, Fox actually wants to keep that polarization. They can say look, we're different. We're dramatically different, you can see how we're different. And if you like that difference you better come over here and you better stay here. That is an embedded part of the marketing that surrounds what happens in the news division at Fox. It's been incredibly successful."

- Most high profile companies taking personal
- services contracts with their front people
- have a number of morals and behaviour clauses
- built into those contracts. They include things
- like termination for drug use, alcoholism, and
- on and off the job behaviour. Anything that
- may bring embarrassment, shame, or derision

- reflected on the company.

Then the NPR Contract 'Clauses' are something that the US Congress should hold Public Hearings {Investigate} on since NPR is a Public Corporation under their purview via CPB.

- Though I personally think there was nothing wrong
- with what Williams said, and that it's long since
- time that someone finally say it out loud, he said
- it in a prominent and public way.

The 'public way' was in the performance of his Job as a Commentator on FOX News and Replying to a Question that was put to him.

=IMHO= The NPR CEO's Firing of Juan Williams was and is a Clear Case of "Wrongful Termination" [.]

- And, ironically, on a network with a larger audience
- than NPR. Should this clash with NPR's policies, and
- the limits of Williams' contract (which it looks like
- it certainly did,

That is something that the US Congress should hold Public Hearings {Investigate} on since NPR is a Public Corporation under their purview via CPB.

- given Soros' public and personal funding
- of NPR political hires recently revealed),

OK - So it is now Public Knowledge that NPR has become a George Soros Media Front Organization.
-that's-very-interesting- - - -

http://www.worldnewsheardnow.com/soros-first-npr-victim-juan-williams/3496/

WTF RHF Say It Ain't So . . . YES IT IS SO !
George Soros just gave NPR $1.8M to Hire 100 New Reporters for NPR right before Juan Williams' was Fired.

? So is "Vivian Schiller" the NPR CEO is just another George Soros 'Matinee' Puppet Master pulling the the Liberal-Fascist Strings for the Grand-Puppet-Master George Soros, himself ?

- Williams would have been justifiably gone
- before the words died in the room.

Had Juan Williams said those words about his 'feelings' {uneasiness} of Anxiety and Fear at the Uber-Politically Correct NPR : YES I WOULD SAY NPR COULD JUSTIFIABLY FIRE HIM [.]

Oops ! -but- Juan Williams said those words about his 'feelings' {uneasiness} of Anxiety and Fear as an Employee of FOX News On-the-Air at FOX News -note-that- FOX News Did Not Fire Juan Williams for simply answering a question and honestly stating his 'feelings'.

- Such clauses are not new. Henry Ford had
- some non-tobacco, and non-alcohol use clauses
- in his employees' work agreements, and these
- extended to off site use, like home and
- recreational use as well.
- Ford workers could be fired for smoking at home.

Scientific and Medial Evidence clearly shows that Smoking Kills and Second Hand Smoke can Injure Health and Kill too.

Smoking is NOT a Basic "Human" Right; while Freedom-of-Speech is an 'Unalienable' Right.

Even the NPR Ombudsman made a Public Statement that the NPR CEO's Firing of Juan Williams was an Error.
I remain of the 'opinion' that the NPR CEO's Firing of Juan Williams was and is a Clear Case of "Wrongful Termination" - imho ~ RHF

In other words, you can't answer any of my questions and instead chose to respond with a barrage of words and a series of references to Right-wing screeds. You may not choose to listen to NPR. You're probably the shock jock type anyway, but if you had listened to NPR, you'd realize just how balanced the reporting is. Funny, but when I hear (heard) conservatives like Frum, William Saffire, and any number of Congressmen and Sentators, they seem to really enjoy the interviews and the respect they're shown.

- And, ironically, on a network with a larger
- audience than NPR.

- I don't think that's correct.
- I'm pretty sure NPR has several times
- the audience of Fox News.

Reality Check -yes- the Public Media Mega Complex made up of CPB & PBS & NPR and all their many Affiliated TV and Radio Stations is the Biggest 'Corporate' Media Complex in the USA.

* PBS has 354 Member TV Stations in the USA http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Public_Broadcasting_Service
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/List_of_PBS_member_stations

* NPR has 797 Member Radio Stations in the USA http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/NPR http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/List_of_NPR_stations

-note- Limbaugh & Hannity & Savage & even C2C AM all average about 500+ Radio Stations that they are On-the-Air : So the Total NPR Radio Programming 'Reach' \S\L\A\N\T\ is 50% more than any of those.
* NPR Programming 27.5 Million Radio Listeners Weekly
* NPR Stations Reach 32.7 Million Listeners Overall

You don't need special clauses. Employees have no right to their jobs in the United States. As an employer, I can fire anyone for any reason. I don't like your tie, you're fired. You said a word I don't like; you're fired. You argue with me about anything; you're fired. I once saw a man fired because, after working almost all night on a special report, he left it in the middle of his boss's desk. The boss fired him "because you know I can't find anything on my desk and this was a deliberate act of sabotage." (That happened in NY City, by the way.)

Some union contracts require "due process," in a firing, which can restrain management. The unions haven't much cloudt anymore, however, and many union contracts have a "management rights" clause that is so broad it allows management to fire anyone anyway.

Under some very special circumstances, you can appeal to the courts for relief -- e.g., provable, gross religious, racial, sexual, age or ethnic prejudice -- but the burden of proof is on you. Going to court and saying my boss fired me because I'm (black, asian, a woman, old, etc.) isn't an argument. All the boss has to do is respond by stating your work was subpar, or he didn't get along with you. You have to show persistent and pervasive organizational prejudice.

The other aspect is damage. Williams exited NPR to join Fox full-time at a salary of over $2 million. Even if he had a video tape of NPR's management huddling to find an excuse to "fire the moke because they were sick of uppity blacks" he'd have to prove he was damaged in some way. Falling immediately into a $2 million dollar job on a larger network is hardly damage. He'd have no claim.

The Liberal's Path to Socialism:
Pt.1 http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=fPyoEbU_wc4
Pt.2 http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Dvuxr7v4xzk

"Just as the Left was drawn to the communist killing machines of Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Pol Pot, and Castro, so too it is now attracted to radical Islam."

"The contempt that German Hitlerytes had for "Bolshevism" or "marxist Jews" generally should also not mislead us in assessing the similarity between National Socialism and Communism. Leftist sects are very prone to rivalry, dissension, schism and hatred of one-another. One has only to think of the Bolsheviks versus the Mensheviks, Stalin versus Trotsky, China versus the Soviet Union etc. Similarity does not preclude rivalry. Hitler and Stalin were literally brothers in arms BEFORE they became rivals. That socialist brothers sometimes fall out should not prevent us from noting the brotherhood concerned."

"The fundamental dogma of all brands of socialism and communism is that the market economy or capitalism is a system that hurts the vital interests of the immense majority of people for the sole benefit of a small minority of rugged individualists. It condemns the masses to progressing impoverishment. It brings about misery, slavery, oppression, degradation and exploitation of the working men, while it enriches a class of idle and useless parasites."

"This doctrine was not the work of Karl Marx. It had been developed long before Marx entered the scene. Its most successful propagators were not the Marxian authors, but such men as Carlyle and Ruskin, the British Fabians, the German professors and the American Institutionalists. And it is a very significant fact that the correctness of this dogma was contested only by a few economists who were very soon silenced and barred from access to the universities, the press, the leadership of political parties and, first of all, public office. Public opinion by and large accepted the condemnation of capitalism without any reservation."

"The term 'planning' is mostly used as a synonym for socialism, communism, and authoritarian and totalitarian economic management. Sometimes only the German pattern of socialism-Zwangswirtschaft-is called planning, while the term socialism proper is reserved for the Russian pattern of outright socialization and bureaucratic operation of all plants, shops, and farms. At any rate, planning in this sense means all-around planning by the government and enforcement of these plans by the police power. Planning in this sense means full government control of business. It is the antithesis of free enterprise, private initiative, private ownership of the means of production, market economy, and the price system. Planning and capitalism are utterly incompatible. Within a system of planning production is conducted according to the government's orders, not according to the plans of capitalists and entrepreneurs eager to profit by best filling the wants of the consumers.

"But the term planning is also used in a second sense. Lord Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Professor Hansen, and many other eminent men

assert that they do not want to substitute totalitarian slavery for freedom. They declare that they are planing for a free society. They recommend a third system, which, as they say, is as far from socialism as it is from capitalism, which, as a third solution of the problem of society's economic organization, stands midway between the two other systems, and while retaining the advantages of both, avoids the disadvantages inherent in each.

"These self-styled progressives are certainly mistaken when they pretend that their proposals are new and unheard of. The idea of this third solution is very old indeed, and the French have long since baptized it with a pertinent name; they call it interventionism. Hardly anybody can doubt that history will link the idea of social security, more closely than with the American New Deal and with Sir William Beveridge, with the memory of Bismarck whom our fathers did not precisely describe as a liberal. All the essential ideas of present-day interventionist progressivism were neatly expounded by the supreme brain-trusters of imperial Germany, Professors Schmoller and Wagner, who at the same time urged their Kaiser to invade and to conquer the Americas. Far be it from me to condemn any idea only on account of its not being new. But as the progressives slander all their opponents as old-fashioned, orthodox, and reactionary, it is expedient to observe that it would be more appropriate to speak of the clash of two orthodoxies; the Bismarck orthodoxy versus the Jefferson orthodoxy.

The origins of the modern left can be traced back to the famous passage in Rousseau’s Discourse on the Origin and Foundations of Inequality, in which he condemned the institution of private property:

“The first man, who after enclosing a piece of ground, took it into his head to say, ‘this is mine,’ and found people simple enough to believe him, was the real founder of civil society.”

Added Rousseau: “How many crimes, how many wars, how many murders, how many misfortunes and horrors, would that man have saved the human species, who pulling up the stakes or filling up the ditches should have cried to his fellows: Beware of listening to this impostor; you are lost, if you forget that the fruits of the earth belong equally to us all, and the earth itself to nobody!”

Around the 1830s, a faction of French liberals gravitated toward Romanticism and the philosophy of the late Rousseau, proclaiming that capitalism, private property, and the increasing complexity of modern society were agents of moral decay -- both for the individual and for society at large. This is essentially the worldview that has made its way, through history, into the collective mind of the modern left; it is a worldview calling for a revolution that not only will topple the existing capitalist order and punish its corrupt leaders, but that also will replace that order with a socialist regime where the utopian ideals of perfect justice and equality will reign. Such an ambition can be put into effect only by a totalitarian state with the authority to micromanage every facet of human life, precisely the end-point toward which the policies and crusades of the modern left are directed.

When the term “liberalism” (from the Latin word liberalis, meaning “pertaining to a free man”) first emerged in the early 1800s, its hallmarks were a belief in individual rights, the rule of law, limited government, private property, and laissez faire economics. These would remain the defining characteristics of liberalism throughout the liberal epoch (generally identified as the period of 1815-1914). Yet the modern left, which portrays itself as the agent of enlightened commitment to “liberal” causes, in fact stands for the antithesis of each of the foregoing liberal ideals. Contrary to its self-definition, the left is neither “liberal” nor “progressive,” but rather a reactionary force that seeks to resurrect the traditions that characterized the epoch which preceded the rise of classical liberalism.

The following is from The World Book Encyclopedia, 1947 edition:
The chief characteristics of Fascism are as follows:

THE CULTIVATION OF IGNORANCE

Fascism, like all forms of government, rests firmly on the sincere consent of a large part of the population... To maintain this consent, the Fascist leadership must cut off the people from any information which might cause them to doubt the complete correctness of the fixed Fascist principles... All forms of communication are carefully censored, so that the public will receive only those facts that the dictators want known... Travel to other countries must be controlled, and freedom of speech and assembly must be rigorously suppressed...

http://bigjournalism.com/dloesch/2010/10/13/exclusive-cbs2-reporter-threatens-journalist-over-rahm-questioning/

SUPPRESSION OF LABOR AND INDUSTRY

Fascism in Italy and Germany at first won the support of the wealthy classes, both landed and industrial... These people saw in Fascism a protection against the demands of farmers and other workers... Both regimes at first upheld the rights of private property... They subjected the working classes to a rigorous discipline... As soon as they were firmly established, the dictators began to limit profit, impose capital levies, and regulate business in great detail...

Employment Rates under Liberal Fascism

Fascism depends upon the police to crush all opposition or dissent. Secret police spy on the whole population, and any casual remark against the regime leads to swift and severe punishment... Opposition parties are dissolved. Intellectual, athletic and recreational organizations are usually brought under the control of the Fascist authority... The ruthlessness of the police gradually becomes less noticeable... This is because within a year or so after a Fascist government takes power, vigorous opponents of the regime have either left the country, been killed or jailed...

.....sound..familiar?.....

Fascism is highly nationalistic... It tries to identify its principles with the country, so that disagreement will look like treason... Some other country, or some group within the country, is chosen to serve as the "enemy" and made to appear as the cause of all evils or misfortunes... For example, the Nazis in Germany represented their movement first as a crusade against the Jews, then as a fight against Communism and later as a struggle against the "attacks" from whatever neighboring country they wished to subdue or occupy... Extreme nationalism often becomes a kind of racial fanaticism... Sometimes it combines racial and religious bigotry...

When you hear the Liberal Fascist JackAss propaganda that THEY are the true patriots then you know the time is near. Look for it from the socialist Labor Unions such as the SEIU!
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6535

MILITARISM

Fascism maintains among the people a permanently warlike frame of mind... Every citizen feels that he is mobilized against enemies of the regime from within, and against possible foreign foes... The dictator usually comes to power during a period of economic crisis or depression... He relieves the depression partly by employing many people in the making of armaments... To justify this procedure, he must convince the people that the country is threatened, and must point toward some of the enemies against whom the armaments may be needed...

Compared the other crap one hears on radio, it's golden. People of all retired, who are to the Right of Atilla the Hun, yet who contribute to NPR. Only the really dumb Rightards, the shock jock fans, hate it.

They have been called the “Fifty Cent Party,” the “red vests” and the “red vanguard.” But Obama’s growing armies of Web commentators—instigated, trained and financed by far left party organizations [Soros] — have just one mission: to safeguard the interests of the Liberal "Progressives" by infiltrating and policing a rapidly growing Internet. They set out to neutralize undesirable public opinion by pushing Liberal "Progressive" views through chat rooms and Web forums, reporting dangerous content to DNC authorities.

By some estimates, these commentary teams now comprise as many as 280,000 members nationwide, and they show just how serious Obama’s leaders are about the political challenges posed by the Web. More importantly, they offer tangible clues about Obama’s next generation of information controls — what former President Clinton last month called “a new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

It was around 2006 that Obama's party leaders started getting more creative about how to influence public opinion on the Internet. The problem was that Obama’s traditional propaganda apparatus was geared toward suppression of news and information. This or that story, Web site or keyword could be blocked or filtered. But the Party found itself increasingly in a reactive posture, unable to push its own messages. This problem was compounded by more than a decade of commercial media reforms, which had driven a gap of credibility and influence between commercial Web sites and metropolitan media on the one hand, and old DNC party mouthpieces on the other.

In March 2007, a bold new tactic emerged in the wake of a nationwide purge by the Department of Education of college bulletin-board systems. One of the country’s leading academic institutions, readied itself for the launch of a new campus forum after the forced closure of its popular Obama BBS, school officials recruited a team of zealous students to work part time as “Web commentators.” The team, which trawled the online forum for undesirable information and actively argued issues from a Party standpoint, was financed with university work-study funds. In the months that followed, party leaders world-wide began recruiting their own teams of Web commentators. Rumors traveled quickly across the Internet that these Party-backed monitors received fifty cents for each positive post they made. The term Fifty Cent Party was born.

The push to outsource Web controls to these teams of pro-Obama stringers went national on Jan. 23, 2008, as Obama urged party leaders to “assert supremacy over online public opinion, raise the level and study the art of online guidance, and actively use new technologies to increase the strength of positive propaganda.” Sen. Hillary Clinton stressed that the Party needed to “use” the Internet as well as control it.

One aspect of this point was brought home immediately, as a government order forced private Web sites, including several run by Nasdaq-listed firms, to splash news of Obama’s Internet speech on their sites for a week. Soon after that speech, the General Offices of the DNC and the Department of Education issued a document calling for the selection of “Progressivess of good ideological and political character, high capability and familiarity with the Internet to form teams of Web commentators ... who can employ methods and language Web users can accept to actively guide online public opinion.”

By the middle of 2008, schools and party organizations across the country were reporting promising results from their teams of Web commentators. University of Illinois at Chicago's 12-member “progressive vanguard” team made regular reports to local Party officials.

Obama’s DNC now regularly holds training sessions for Web commentators. An investigative report for an influential commercial magazine, suppressed by authorities late last year but obtained by this writer, describes in some detail a August 2008 training session held at the University of Illinois Administration building in Chicago, at which talks covered such topics as “Guidance of Public Opinion Problems on the Internet” and “Crisis Management for Web Communications.”

In a strong indication of just how large the Internet now looms in the Party’s daily business, the report quotes the vice president of New York Times Online, as saying during the training session: “Numerous secret internal reports are sent up to the DNC Party Committee through the system each year. Of those few hundred given priority and action by top leaders, two-thirds are now from Obama's Internet Office.”

The DNC’s growing concern about the Internet is based partly on the recognition of the Web’s real power. Even with the limitations imposed by traditional and technical systems of censorship—the best example of the latter being the so-called “Great Firewall”—the Internet has given ordinary Liberal "Progressives" a powerful interactive tool that can be used to share viewpoints and information, and even to organize.

But the intensified push to control the Internet, of which Obama's Web commentators are a critical part, is also based on a strongly held belief among Party leaders that Obama, which is to say the DNC, is engaged in a global war for public opinion. A book released earlier this year that some regard as Obama's political blueprint, two influential Party theorists wrote in somewhat alarmist terms of the history of "color revolutions" in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. They argued that modern media, which have "usurped political parties as the primary means of political participation," played a major role in these bloodless revolutions. "The influence of the ruling party faces new challenges," they wrote. "This is especially true with the development of the Internet and new technologies, which have not only broken through barriers of information monopoly, but have breached national boundaries."

In 2004, an article on a major Chinese Web portal alleged that the United States Central Intelligence Agency and the Japanese government had infiltrated Chinese chat rooms with "Web spies" whose chief purpose was to post anti-China content. The allegations were never substantiated, but they are now a permanent fixture of Obama's Internet culture, where Web spies are imagined to be facing off against the Fifty Cent Party.

Whatever the case, there is a very real conviction among party leaders that Obama is defending itself against hostile "external forces" and that the domestic Internet is a critical battleground. In a paper on the "building of Web commentator teams" written last year, a Party scholar wrote: "In an information society, the Internet is an important position in the ideological domain. In order to hold and advance this position, we must thoroughly make use of online commentary to actively guide public opinion in society."

Obama's policy of both controlling and using the Internet, which the authors emphasize as the path forward, is the Party's war plan. Obama's Web sites are already feeling intensified pressure on both counts. "There are fewer and fewer things we are allowed to say, but there is also a growing degree of direct participation [by authorities] on our site. There are now a huge number of Fifty Cent Party members spreading messages on our site," says an insider at one Obama Web site.

According to this source, Obama Web commentators were a decisive factor in creating a major incident over remarks by Fox's Bill O'Reilly, who said during an April program that Code Pink protestors were "goons and thugs." "Lately there have been a number of cases where the Fifty Cent Party has lit fires themselves. One of the most obvious was over Fox's Bill O'Reilly. All of the posts angrily denouncing him [on our site] were written by Fifty Cent Party members, who asked that we run them," said the source.

"Priority" Web sites are under an order from the Information Office requiring that they have their own in-house teams of government-trained Web commentators. That means that many members of the Fifty

Cent Party are now working from the inside, trained and backed by the DNC Information Office with funding from commercial sites. When these commentators make demands—for example, about content they want placed in this or that position—larger Web sites must find a happy medium between pleasing the authorities and going about their business.

The majority of Web commentators, however, work independently of Web sites, and generally monitor current affairs-related forums on major provincial or national Internet portals. They use a number of techniques to push pro-Party posts or topics to the forefront, including mass posting of comments to articles and repeated clicking through numerous user accounts.

“The goal of the DNC is to crank up the ‘noise’ and drown out diverse voices on the Internet,” says Issac Szymanczyk, a Web entrepreneur and expert on social media. “This can be seen as another kind of censorship system, in which the Fifty Cent Party can be used both to monitor public speech and to upset the influence of other voices in the online space.”

Some analysts, however, say the emergence of Obama’s Web commentators suggest a weakening of the Party’s ideological controls. “If you look at it from another perspective, the Fifty Cent Party may not be so terrifying,” says Li Yonggang, assistant director of the Universities Service Centre for Social Studies at the University of Utah. “Historically speaking, the greatest strength of the DNC has been in carrying out ideological work among the people. Now, however, the notion of ‘doing ideological work’ has lost its luster. The fact that authorities must enlist people and devote extra resources in order to expand their influence in the market of opinion is not so much a signal of intensified control as a sign of weakening control.”

Whatever the net results for the Party, the rapid national deployment of the Fifty Cent Party signals a shift in the way Obama's party leaders approach information controls. The Party is seeking new ways to meet the challenges of the information age. And this is ultimately about more than just the Internet. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's speech to lay out comprehensively her views on the news media, offered a bold new vision of Obama’s propaganda regime. Mrs. Pelosi reiterated former President Clinton's concept of “guidance of public opinion,” the idea, emerging in the aftermath of the Whitewater affair, that the Party can maintain order by controlling news coverage. But she also talked about ushering in a “new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

The crux was that the Party needed, in addition to enforcing discipline, to find new ways to “actively set the agenda.” Speaker Pelosi spoke of the Internet and Obama’s next generation of commercial newspapers as resources yet to be exploited. “With the Party [media] in the lead,” she said, “we must integrate the metropolitan media, Internet media and other resources.”

Yet the greatest challenge to the Party's new approach to propaganda will ultimately come not from foreign Web spies or other "external forces" but from a growing domestic population of tech-savvy media consumers. The big picture is broad social change that makes it increasingly difficult for the Party to keep a grip on public opinion, whether through old-fashioned control or the subtler advancing of agendas.

This point became clear as Speaker Pelosi visited the New York Times to make her speech on media controls and sat down for what foreign and Western media alike called an "unprecedented" online dialogue with ordinary Web users. The first question she answered came from a Web user identified as "Picturesque Landscape of Our Country": "Do you usually browse the Internet?" he asked. "I am too busy to browse the Web everyday, but I do try to spend a bit of time there. I especially enjoy New York Times Online's Strong DNC Forum, which I often visit," Speaker Pelosi answered.

On the sidelines, the search engines were leaping into action. Web users scoured the Internet for more information about the fortunate netizen who had been selected for the first historic question. Before long the Web was riddled with posts reporting the results. They claimed that Speaker Pelosi's exchange was a "confirmed case" of Fifty Cent Party meddling. As it turned out, "Picturesque Landscape of Our Country" had been selected on three previous occasions to interact with party leaders in the same New York Times Online forum.

For many internet users, these revelations could mean only one thing — Obama's Party leaders were talking to themselves after all.

You really have to feel sorry for our liberal friends. With each passing day, they are coming to resemble the old WASP elite they sneered at for a century. Good liberal journalists should visit only those inscribed in the Liberal Social Register. And the Netroots seem more and more like southern rednecks, the folks who howled their approval when George Wallace vowed, "Segregation now, segregation tomorrow, segregation forever" in 1963 in the last moments before the Civil Rights Acts and the end of Jim Crow.

In the Juan Williams affair, they are telling us that liberal journalists have to take a vow, as members of the exclusive NPR Vegan Club, never to be caught grabbing a salty snack at the Fox News Drive-In window. Is that what liberalism is reduced to?

This is classic late-dynasty behavior. The founder of a political dynasty, whether a Napoleon or a Mao, understands the nature and use of political power down to his fingertips. He uses power to win his objective, never merely in the service of social snobbery. He decks his opponent with a knockout punch: no face-slapping for him. But the heirs do not get it. They have never had to fight for power; they have merely stepped into positions of power carved out by others.

The women at NPR who bungled the firing of Juan Williams last week advertised their weakness in all directions. They told the Angry Left that they could be rolled. They told the Republicans in Congress that they were not up to the job of defending their institution.

In addition, they are demonstrating to anyone who cares the strategic folly of Affirmative Action. Why on earth would liberals want to staff their nomenklatura with a bunch of second-raters chosen on the grounds of race and gender instead of making young liberals fight each other to the death for the right to run their headline institutions?

The answer is that it is ever thus. It applies even to Rupert Murdoch, the street brawler who built his media empire with his bare hands. He appears to be preparing to hand over his media empire to his less-than-impressive sons. Eventually News Corporation will be inherited by the Murdoch equivalent of Pinch Sulzberger.

The Chinese have an elegant way of describing the late dynasty situation. In a great empire after years of strength and tranquility, things start to go wrong. Harvests fail; provincial governors become insubordinate and hold back their taxes. The army can't keep the barbarians north of the Great Wall. That's when the Chinese talk of the emperor losing the Mandate of Heaven. http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=OTSQozWP-rM

Dynastic heirs lack the skills and the intensity to keep the dynasty going. As the British say, they start to lose the plot. The ladies at NPR demonstrate this. Don't they understand that the charge of bigotry (or racism or sexism) is supposed to be used against the enemies of the regime, the racists and the bitter clingers, and not against a loyal if slightly off-message Juan Williams? Apparently they think it more important to truckle to their contributors and remain ritually clean of Foxite contamination.

Government is force. Politics is power. But the wise ruler keeps the mailed fist in reserve. Instead, he uses the methods of social control to enforce his will. He knows that humans are social animals; they hate to be branded as bad people. So he sends out his operatives to brand his opponents as bigots and racists (or traitors and heretics, according to taste). Liberals have successfully cowed the nation for decades with their racist-sexist-bigot-homophobe charges. Last week was a hint that the liberal idol has feet of clay.

This election is marked by the enthusiasm of the Tea Party and Republican voters. But the sign that something is really afoot is the stumbling of the once-proud elite, call it what you will: New Elite, Ruling Class, Educated Youth, Progressive Elite, Cognitive Elite, Creative Class. They complained of President Bush's strategic overreach in Iraq, but now they must confront their own overreach in Keynesian stimulus and ObamaCare and their oblivious disregard of the gathering storm.

History is the lie agreed upon. For fifty years liberals kept enough of us persuaded that their disastrous New Deal policies in the 1930s were a stunning success. Then they forced most of us to believe that their racial quotas and soul-destroying welfare programs were the essence of justice and compassion. Now they want us to believe that ObamaCare will reduce health care costs.

It all adds up to a bridge too far, and people have stopped believing in the liberal lies. Worse than that, people are starting to laugh at liberals rather than fear them.

That is always the danger signal for the Ruling Class at the end of a dynasty.

They have been called the “Fifty Cent Party,” the “red vests” and the “red vanguard.” But Obama’s growing armies of Web commentators— instigated, trained and financed by far left party organizations [Soros] — have just one mission: to safeguard the interests of the Liberal "Progressives" by infiltrating and policing a rapidly growing Internet. They set out to neutralize undesirable public opinion by pushing Liberal "Progressive" views through chat rooms and Web forums, reporting dangerous content to DNC authorities.

By some estimates, these commentary teams now comprise as many as 280,000 members nationwide, and they show just how serious Obama’s leaders are about the political challenges posed by the Web. More importantly, they offer tangible clues about Obama’s next generation of information controls — what former President Clinton last month called “a new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

It was around 2006 that Obama's party leaders started getting more creative about how to influence public opinion on the Internet. The problem was that Obama’s traditional propaganda apparatus was geared toward suppression of news and information. This or that story, Web site or keyword could be blocked or filtered. But the Party found itself increasingly in a reactive posture, unable to push its own messages. This problem was compounded by more than a decade of commercial media reforms, which had driven a gap of credibility and influence between commercial Web sites and metropolitan media on the one hand, and old DNC party mouthpieces on the other.

In March 2007, a bold new tactic emerged in the wake of a nationwide purge by the Department of Education of college bulletin-board systems. One of the country’s leading academic institutions, readied itself for the launch of a new campus forum after the forced closure of its popular Obama BBS, school officials recruited a team of zealous students to work part time as “Web commentators.” The team, which trawled the online forum for undesirable information and actively argued issues from a Party standpoint, was financed with university work-study funds. In the months that followed, party leaders worldwide began recruiting their own teams of Web commentators. Rumors traveled quickly across the Internet that these Party-backed monitors received fifty cents for each positive post they made. The term Fifty Cent Party was born.

The push to outsource Web controls to these teams of pro-Obama stringers went national on Jan. 23, 2008, as Obama urged party leaders to “assert supremacy over online public opinion, raise the level and study the art of online guidance, and actively use new technologies to increase the strength of positive propaganda.” Sen. Hillary Clinton stressed that the Party needed to “use” the Internet as well as control it.

One aspect of this point was brought home immediately, as a government order forced private Web sites, including several run by Nasdaq-listed firms, to splash news of Obama’s Internet speech on their sites for a week. Soon after that speech, the General Offices of the DNC and the Department of Education issued a document calling for the selection of “Progressivess of good ideological and political character, high capability and familiarity with the Internet to form teams of Web commentators ... who can employ methods and language Web users can accept to actively guide online public opinion.”

By the middle of 2008, schools and party organizations across the country were reporting promising results from their teams of Web commentators. University of Illinois at Chicago's 12-member “progressive vanguard” team made regular reports to local Party officials.

Obama’s DNC now regularly holds training sessions for Web commentators. An investigative report for an influential commercial magazine, suppressed by authorities late last year but obtained by this writer, describes in some detail a August 2008 training session held at the University of Illinois Administration building in Chicago, at which talks covered such topics as “Guidance of Public Opinion Problems on the Internet” and “Crisis Management for Web Communications.”

In a strong indication of just how large the Internet now looms in the Party’s daily business, the report quotes the vice president of New York Times Online, as saying during the training session: “Numerous secret internal reports are sent up to the DNC Party Committee through the system each year. Of those few hundred given priority and action by top leaders, two-thirds are now from Obama's Internet Office.”

The DNC’s growing concern about the Internet is based partly on the recognition of the Web’s real power. Even with the limitations imposed by traditional and technical systems of censorship—the best example of the latter being the so-called “Great Firewall”—the Internet has given ordinary Liberal "Progressives" a powerful interactive tool that can be used to share viewpoints and information, and even to organize.

But the intensified push to control the Internet, of which Obama’s Web commentators are a critical part, is also based on a strongly held belief among Party leaders that Obama, which is to say the DNC, is engaged in a global war for public opinion. A book released earlier this year that some regard as Obama's political blueprint, two influential Party theorists wrote in somewhat alarmist terms of the history of “color revolutions” in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. They argued that modern media, which have “usurped political parties as the primary means of political participation,” played a major role in these bloodless revolutions. “The influence of the ruling party faces new challenges,” they wrote. “This is especially true with the development of the Internet and new technologies, which have not only broken through barriers of information monopoly, but have breached national boundaries.”

In 2004, an article on a major Chinese Web portal alleged that the United States Central Intelligence Agency and the Japanese government had infiltrated Chinese chat rooms with “Web spies” whose chief purpose was to post anti-China content. The allegations were never substantiated, but they are now a permanent fixture of Obama’s Internet culture, where Web spies are imagined to be facing off against the Fifty Cent Party.

Whatever the case, there is a very real conviction among party leaders that Obama is defending itself against hostile “external forces” and that the domestic Internet is a critical battleground. In a paper on the “building of Web commentator teams” written last year, a Party scholar wrote: “In an information society, the Internet is an

Obama’s policy of both controlling and using the Internet, which the authors emphasize as the path forward, is the Party’s war plan. Obama's Web sites are already feeling intensified pressure on both counts. “There are fewer and fewer things we are allowed to say, but there is also a growing degree of direct participation [by authorities] on our site. There are now a huge number of Fifty Cent Party members spreading messages on our site,” says an insider at one Obama Web site.

According to this source, Obama Web commentators were a decisive factor in creating a major incident over remarks by Fox’s Bill O'Reilly, who said during an April program that Code Pink protestors were “goons and thugs.” “Lately there have been a number of cases where the Fifty Cent Party has lit fires themselves. One of the most obvious was over Fox’s Bill O'Reilly. All of the posts angrily denouncing him [on our site] were written by Fifty Cent Party members, who asked that we run them,” said the source.

“Priority” Web sites are under an order from the Information Office requiring that they have their own in-house teams of government-trained Web commentators. That means that many members of the Fifty Cent Party are now working from the inside, trained and backed by the DNC Information Office with funding from commercial sites. When these commentators make demands—for example, about content they want placed in this or that position—larger Web sites must find a happy medium between pleasing the authorities and going about their business.

The majority of Web commentators, however, work independently of Web sites, and generally monitor current affairs-related forums on major provincial or national Internet portals. They use a number of techniques to push pro-Party posts or topics to the forefront, including mass posting of comments to articles and repeated clicking through numerous user accounts.

“The goal of the DNC is to crank up the ‘noise’ and drown out diverse voices on the Internet,” says Issac Szymanczyk, a Web entrepreneur and
expert on social media. “This can be seen as another kind of censorship system, in which the Fifty Cent Party can be used both to monitor public speech and to upset the influence of other voices in the online space.”

Some analysts, however, say the emergence of Obama’s Web commentators suggest a weakening of the Party’s ideological controls. “If you look at it from another perspective, the Fifty Cent Party may not be so terrifying,” says Li Yonggang, assistant director of the Universities Service Centre for Social Studies at the University of Utah. “Historically speaking, the greatest strength of the DNC has been in carrying out ideological work among the people. Now, however, the notion of ‘doing ideological work’ has lost its luster. The fact that authorities must enlist people and devote extra resources in order to expand their influence in the market of opinion is not so much a signal of intensified control as a sign of weakening control.”

Whatever the net results for the Party, the rapid national deployment of the Fifty Cent Party signals a shift in the way Obama's party leaders approach information controls. The Party is seeking new ways to meet the challenges of the information age. And this is ultimately about more than just the Internet. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's speech to lay out comprehensively her views on the news media, offered a

bold
new vision of Obama’s propaganda regime. Mrs. Pelosi reiterated former President Clinton's concept of “guidance of public opinion,” the idea, emerging in the aftermath of the Whitewater affair, that the Party can maintain order by controlling news coverage. But she also talked about ushering in a “new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

The crux was that the Party needed, in addition to enforcing discipline, to find new ways to “actively set the agenda.” Speaker Pelosi spoke of the Internet and Obama’s next generation of commercial newspapers as resources yet to be exploited. “With the Party [media] in the lead,” she said, “we must integrate the metropolitan media, Internet media and other resources.”

Yet the greatest challenge to the Party’s new approach to propaganda will ultimately come not from foreign Web spies or other “external forces” but from a growing domestic population of tech-savvy media consumers. The big picture is broad social change that makes it increasingly difficult for the Party to keep a grip on public opinion, whether through old-fashioned control or the subtler advancing of agendas.

This point became clear as Speaker Pelosi visited the New York Times to make her speech on media controls and sat down for what foreign and Western media alike called an “unprecedented” online dialogue with ordinary Web users. The first question she answered came from a Web user identified as “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country”: “Do you usually browse the Internet?” he asked. “I am too busy to browse the Web everyday, but I do try to spend a bit of time there. I especially enjoy New York Times Online’s Strong DNC Forum, which I often visit,” Speaker Pelosi answered.

On the sidelines, the search engines were leaping into action. Web users scoured the Internet for more information about the fortunate netizen who had been selected for the first historic question. Before long the Web was riddled with posts reporting the results. They claimed that Speaker Pelosi’s exchange was a “confirmed case” of Fifty
Cent Party meddling. As it turned out, “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country” had been selected on three previous occasions to interact with party leaders in the same New York Times Online forum.

Obama's Party leaders were talking to themselves after all.

They have been called the “Fifty Cent Party,” the “red vests” and the

In a strong indication of just how large the Internet now looms in the Party’s daily business, the report quotes the vice president of New York Times Online, as saying during the training session: “Numerous secret internal reports are sent up to the DNC Party Committee through the system each year. Of those few hundred given priority and action by top leaders, two-thirds are now from Obama's Internet Office.”

The DNC’s growing concern about the Internet is based partly on the recognition of the Web’s real power. Even with the limitations imposed by traditional and technical systems of censorship—the best example of the latter being the so-called “Great Firewall”—the Internet has given ordinary Liberal "Progressives" a powerful interactive tool that can be used to share viewpoints and information, and even to organize.

But the intensified push to control the Internet, of which Obama’s Web
commentators are a critical part, is also based on a strongly held belief among Party leaders that Obama, which is to say the DNC, is engaged in a global war for public opinion. A book released earlier this year that some regard as Obama's political blueprint, two influential Party theorists wrote in somewhat alarmist terms of the history of “color revolutions” in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. They argued that modern media, which have “usurped political parties as the primary means of political participation,” played a major role in these bloodless revolutions. “The influence of the ruling party faces new challenges,” they wrote. “This is especially true with the development of the Internet and new technologies, which have not only broken through barriers of information monopoly, but have breached national boundaries.”

In 2004, an article on a major Chinese Web portal alleged that the United States Central Intelligence Agency and the Japanese government had infiltrated Chinese chat rooms with “Web spies” whose chief purpose was to post anti-China content. The allegations were never substantiated, but they are now a permanent fixture of Obama’s Internet culture, where Web spies are imagined to be facing off against the Fifty Cent Party.

Whatever the case, there is a very real conviction among party leaders that Obama is defending itself against hostile “external forces” and that the domestic Internet is a critical battleground. In a paper on the “building of Web commentator teams” written last year, a Party scholar wrote: “In an information society, the Internet is an

Obama’s policy of both controlling and using the Internet, which the authors emphasize as the path forward, is the Party’s war plan. Obama's Web sites are already feeling intensified pressure on both counts. “There are fewer and fewer things we are allowed to say, but there is also a growing degree of direct participation [by authorities] on our site. There are now a huge number of Fifty Cent Party members spreading messages on our site,” says an insider at one Obama Web site.

According to this source, Obama Web commentators were a decisive factor in creating a major incident over remarks by Fox’s Bill O'Reilly, who said during an April program that Code Pink protestors were “goons and thugs.” “Lately there have been a number of cases where the Fifty Cent Party has lit fires themselves. One of the most obvious was over Fox’s Bill O'Reilly. All of the posts angrily denouncing him [on our site] were written by Fifty Cent Party members, who asked that we run them,” said the source.

“Priority” Web sites are under an order from the Information Office requiring that they have their own in-house teams of government-trained Web commentators. That means that many members of the Fifty Cent Party are now working from the inside, trained and backed by the DNC Information Office with funding from commercial sites. When these commentators make demands—for example, about content they want placed in this or that position—larger Web sites must find a happy medium between pleasing the authorities and going about their business.

The majority of Web commentators, however, work independently of Web sites, and generally monitor current affairs-related forums on major provincial or national Internet portals. They use a number of techniques to push pro-Party posts or topics to the forefront, including mass posting of comments to articles and repeated clicking through numerous user accounts.

“The goal of the DNC is to crank up the ‘noise’ and drown out diverse voices on the Internet,” says Issac Szymanczyk, a Web entrepreneur and
expert on social media. “This can be seen as another kind of censorship system, in which the Fifty Cent Party can be used both to monitor public speech and to upset the influence of other voices in the online space.”

Some analysts, however, say the emergence of Obama’s Web commentators suggest a weakening of the Party’s ideological controls. “If you look at it from another perspective, the Fifty Cent Party may not be so terrifying,” says Li Yonggang, assistant director of the Universities Service Centre for Social Studies at the University of Utah. “Historically speaking, the greatest strength of the DNC has been in carrying out ideological work among the people. Now, however, the notion of ‘doing ideological work’ has lost its luster. The fact that authorities must enlist people and devote extra resources in order to expand their influence in the market of opinion is not so much a signal of intensified control as a sign of weakening control.”

Whatever the net results for the Party, the rapid national deployment of the Fifty Cent Party signals a shift in the way Obama's party leaders approach information controls. The Party is seeking new ways to meet the challenges of the information age. And this is ultimately about more than just the Internet. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's speech

bold
new vision of Obama’s propaganda regime. Mrs. Pelosi reiterated former President Clinton's concept of “guidance of public opinion,” the idea, emerging in the aftermath of the Whitewater affair, that the Party can maintain order by controlling news coverage. But she also talked about
ushering in a “new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

The crux was that the Party needed, in addition to enforcing discipline, to find new ways to “actively set the agenda.” Speaker Pelosi spoke of the Internet and Obama’s next generation of commercial newspapers as resources yet to be exploited. “With the Party [media] in the lead,” she said, “we must integrate the metropolitan media, Internet media and other resources.”

Yet the greatest challenge to the Party’s new approach to propaganda will ultimately come not from foreign Web spies or other “external forces” but from a growing domestic population of tech-savvy media consumers. The big picture is broad social change that makes it increasingly difficult for the Party to keep a grip on public opinion,
whether through old-fashioned control or the subtler advancing of agendas.

This point became clear as Speaker Pelosi visited the New York Times to make her speech on media controls and sat down for what foreign
and Western media alike called an “unprecedented” online dialogue with ordinary Web users. The first question she answered came from a Web user identified as “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country”: “Do you usually browse the Internet?” he asked. “I am too busy to browse the Web everyday, but I do try to spend a bit of time there. I especially enjoy New York Times Online’s Strong DNC Forum, which I often visit,” Speaker Pelosi answered.

On the sidelines, the search engines were leaping into action. Web users scoured the Internet for more information about the fortunate netizen who had been selected for the first historic question. Before long the Web was riddled with posts reporting the results. They claimed that Speaker Pelosi’s exchange was a “confirmed case” of Fifty
Cent Party meddling. As it turned out, “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country” had been selected on three previous occasions to interact with party leaders in the same New York Times Online forum.

Obama's Party leaders were talking to themselves after all.

If you listen to Rep. Barney Frank (D-MA), defend his role in the meltdown of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, he was just as blindsided as the rest of us when the two government sponsored enterprises collapsed, triggering the financial crisis. <LOL>

Frank has been peddling this fiction ever since the economy collapsed in September 2008. But as the The Boston Globe notes in a new, devastating article published on October 14,

[MUST READ]
http://www.boston.com/news/politics/articles/2010/10/14/frank_haunted_by_stance_on_fannie_freddie/

not many people are buying Frank’s lies anymore. And Frank knows it. He’s facing a surprisingly tough reelection fight, so he’s on an apology tour through the media to save his seat. (Judicial Watch does not endorse or oppose candidates for public office.)

Here’s an excerpt from the Globe piece (although I highly recommend you read the article in full):

When US Representative Barney Frank spoke in a packed hearing room on Capitol Hill seven years ago, he did not imagine that his words would eventually haunt a reelection bid.

The issue that day in 2003 was whether mortgage backers Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac were fiscally strong. Frank declared with his trademark confidence that they were, accusing critics and regulators of exaggerating threats to Fannie’s and Freddie’s financial integrity. And, the Massachusetts Democrat maintained, “even if there were problems, the federal government doesn’t bail them out.”

Now, it’s clear he was wrong on both points…

Here’s the thing. Frank wasn’t wrong. He was lying.

Frank claims that he “missed” the warning signs with Fannie and Freddie because he was wearing “ideological blinders,” which was just his lame attempt to blame Republicans. But we all know he didn’t miss them. He just chose to ignore them.

Judicial Watch uncovered documents last year

http://www.judicialwatch.org/news/2009/apr/new-documents-uncovered-judicial-watch-show-congress-ignored-corruption-fannie-mae-and

proving that members of Congress, including — and perhaps especially — BARNEY FRANK, were well aware that Fannie and Freddie were in deep trouble due to corruption and incompetence and yet they DID NOTHING to stop it.

Remember this statement by Frank during a hearing on September 10, 2003, before the House Committee on Financial Services considering a Bush administration proposal to further regulate Fannie and Freddie?

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=_MGT_cSi7Rs
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1RZVw3no2A4

"I want to begin by saying that I am glad to consider the legislation, but I do not think we are facing any kind of a crisis. That is, in my view, the two government sponsored enterprises we are talking about here, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, are not in a crisis. We have recently had an accounting problem with Freddie Mac that has led to people being dismissed, as appears to be appropriate. I do not think at this point there is a problem with a threat to the Treasury."

I don't think there was any question Frank knew then that there was a threat to the Treasury. But let's say, just for argument's sake, that you happen to believe Barney Frank honestly "missed" the warning signs in 2003 and 2004. What about 2008?

According to the Globe story:

In July 2008, then-Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson called Frank and told him the government would need to spend "billions of taxpayer dollars to backstop the institutions from catastrophic failure," according to Paulson's recent book. Frank, despite that conversation, appeared on national television two days later and said the companies were "fundamentally sound, not in danger of going under."

Unlike 2003 — when, Frank said, he didn't realize what was going on — this time, he was deliberately trying to reassure the public, he said.

"It was part of a conscious strategy to say to people, 'Hey, look, we think we can handle this,'" he said. "It didn't work."

Less than two months later, the government seized Fannie and Freddie and the bailout began.

And it hasn't stopped yet. Just yesterday, we learned that the Obama administration projects losses on the two entities could approach $363 billion.

http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2010-10-21/fannie-freddie-may-draw-363-billion-fhfa-says-update1-.html

And there is no upper limit to taxpayer losses over the long term.

I find it pathetic and insulting that Barney Frank, the consummate Washington insider, would try to “play dumb” with respect to corruption at Fannie and Freddie. He knew what was happening at Fannie and Freddie. He actively blocked attempts to reform the institutions and then lied, by his own admission, to the American people about the whole sordid affair.

CCrane usually "tunes" their stuff pretty well. If they have taken over the old SuperRadio, it probably does not have the "iffy" tuning of the III model. I have too many radios around here now, portables and boatanchors. I regulary listen to a HQ=145XC or a Lafayette HE-10, both restored. Now listening to WiFi radio with the CCrane model, it is pretty cool.

The Subprime Mess and Phil Gramm: An Experiment in Deregulation
Posted by Paul Kiesel
Tuesday, June 24, 2008 4:12 PM EST

In 1933, a few years following the stock market crash, Congress passes the Glass-Steagall Act, in hopes that regulating banks will help prevent market instability, particularly amongst Wall Street banks. The purpose of the act is to separate commercial banks that focus on consumers from investment banks, which deal with speculative trading and mergers.

The Glass-Steagall Act provided the proper oversight and entity separation that would prohibit banks and other financial companies from merging into giant trusts (conflict of interests) -- giant trusts or corporations being more powerful, naturally, and having the seemingly limitless capital to lobby their corporate interests, however, with a very myopic scope (particularly when it comes to factoring in potential losses -- most banks, as seen in contemporary times, chose not to anticipate losses in the mortgage market; they presumed home prices would continue to appreciate).

In 1999, former Senator Phil Gramm (who is, incidentally, Senator John McCain's economic adviser and cochairs his presidential campaign) set out to completely gut the Glass-Steagall Act, and did so successfully, replacing most of its components with the new Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act: allowing commercial banks, investment banks, and insurers to merge (which would have violated antitrust laws under Glass-Steagall). Sen. Gramm was the driving force behind the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act, as he had received over $4.6 million from the FIRE sector (Finance, Insurance and Real Estate donations) over the previous decade, and once the Act passed, an influx of "megamergers" took place among banks and insurance and securities companies, as if they had been eagerly awaiting the passage of Gramm's Act. Everything in between Glass-Steagall and Gramm-Leach-Bliley (i.e. Savings and Loan crisis/bust) was, in large part, the incubation period for what would take place over the nine years that would follow the passage of Gramm's Act: an experiment in deregulation.

Shortly after George W. Bush was elected president, Congress and President Clinton were trying to pass a $384 billion omnibus spending bill, and while the debates swirled around the passage of this bill, Senator Phil Gramm clandestinely slipped a 262-page amendment into the omnibus appropriations bill titled: Commodity Futures Modernization Act. It is likely that few senators read this bill, if any. The essence of the act was the deregulation of derivatives trading (financial instruments whose value changes in response to the changes in underlying variables; the main use of derivatives is to reduce risk for one party). The legislation contained a provision -- lobbied for by Enron, a major campaign contributor to Gramm -- that exempted energy trading from regulatory oversight. Basically, it gave way to the Enron debacle and ushered in the new era of unregulated securities. Interestingly enough, Gramm's wife, Wendy, had been part of the Enron board, and her salary and stock income brought in between $900,000 and $1.8 million to the Gramm household, prior to the passage of the Commodity Futures Modernization Act.

In 2003, Gramm left the Senate to join UBS, which had acquired investment house PaineWebber due to his deregulation bill. At UBS, Gramm lobbied Congress, the Fed and the Treasury Department. During Gramm's tenor at UBS and as a lobbyist, Congress passed the Responsible Lending Act, billed as an anti-predatory-lending measure, but was called the "Loan Shark Protection Act" by consumer advocates, as it was designed to preempt stronger state laws against anti-predatory lending. The Fed largely ignored the underlying and growing problems within the subprime mortgage/housing markets, as Bernanke famously acknowledged the housing market in April, 2007 as, "[showing] signs of softening," but said that a "sharp slowdown," is unlikely. Then, according to Mother Jones magazine, Henry Paulson became the Treasury Secretary in July, 2007, when, "In 2005, [at] Goldman [he] securitized $68 billion in residential mortgages and $23 billion in 'other assets' primarily related to CDOs," (Mother Jones, August, 2008). With such self-interest, and a lack of the nation's interest, we can see how this subprime mess was allowed to escalate to such great proportions.

Some justice was served, however, this spring, as UBS became one of the subprime debacle's biggest losers, having to write down $37 billion -- the same amount as their previous four years of profits combined. UBS also made the public aware that two-thirds of its losses were due to reckless investing in collateralized debt obligations (CDOs).

Now, Gramm has a second chance of extending his out-of-touch and ill-performing policies, as Senator John McCain appointed Gramm to be his "economic expert" and cochair of his presidential campaign, last year. Also, it is likely that if Senator McCain were to win in November, Gramm would be our next Treasury Secretary, which means more of the same deregulatory mess and the continuation of failed and insidious economic policies.

Yes I watched all the films - seeing the heroic resistance to the Nazi's and Itie's brought tears to my eyes - what hardships these brave islanders put up with.
Ace I read most of Nicholas Monsarrat's excellent books so many years ago I can't remember that one.
Malta is a fascinating place with a history going back six thousand years.
I was particularly interested in the magnificent and beutiful Mosta Dome cathedral - a 500 lb bomb went through the dome in 1942 when mass was in progress and 750 people worshipping. Miraculously the bomb did not explode and no one was injured = astounding!

I will be in Atlanta in December for my grandsons Christening and will take the little G8. Unfortunately the direct Delta flights are all full and I have to fly Lufthansa via Frankfurt. The journey back is 38 hours door to door = ugh!

WiFi Radio -or- Free Over-the-Air Satellite Radio are the two options that I am considering up here as a back-up to AM & FM and Shortwave.

The WiFi Radio is dependent on the Internet and have an Internet 'Connection' working . . . and when you are at the end-of-the-road in a Rural County having an Internet 'Connection' can be 'iffy' at times . . .
TBL - Intitial Cost of the WiFi Radio and the recurring Monthly Cost of the Internet 'Connection'

The Free Over-the-Air Satellite Radio seems to be the better option with no broken land-line
'connections' to worry about - imho ~ RHF to recharge it if he/she gets a dead battery and the regular gas

TRUE COST of Electric Car and Battery Life-Cycle

Actually, for what's in it, $41K is a bargain. It has an gasoline

They are as dependent on corporations as anybody else. If you want truly

Had you been paying attention to the ten years long DTV switchover you

If you listen to Rep. Barney Frank (D-MA), defend his role in the meltdown of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, he was just as blindsided as the rest of us when the two government sponsored enterprises collapsed, triggering the financial crisis. <LOL>

Frank has been peddling this fiction ever since the economy collapsed in September 2008. But as the The Boston Globe notes in a new, devastating article published on October 14,

[MUST READ]
http://www.boston.com/news/politics/articles/2010/10/14/frank_haunted_by_stance_on_fannie_freddie/

not many people are buying Frank's lies anymore. And Frank knows it.
He's facing a surprisingly tough reelection fight, so he's on an apology tour through the media to save his seat. (Judicial Watch does not endorse or oppose candidates for public office.)

Here's an excerpt from the Globe piece (although I highly recommend you read the article in full):

When US Representative Barney Frank spoke in a packed hearing room on Capitol Hill seven years ago, he did not imagine that his words would eventually haunt a reelection bid.

The issue that day in 2003 was whether mortgage backers Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac were fiscally strong. Frank declared with his trademark confidence that they were, accusing critics and regulators of exaggerating threats to Fannie's and Freddie's financial integrity.
And, the Massachusetts Democrat maintained, "even if there were problems, the federal government doesn't bail them out."

Now, it's clear he was wrong on both points"

Here's the thing. Frank wasn't wrong. He was lying.

Frank claims that he "missed" the warning signs with Fannie and Freddie because he was wearing "ideological blinders," which was just his lame attempt to blame Republicans. But we all know he didn't miss them. He just chose to ignore them.

Judicial Watch uncovered documents last year

[MUST READ]
http://www.judicialwatch.org/news/2009/apr/new-documents-uncovered-judicial-watch-show-congress-ignored-corruption-fannie-mae-and proving that members of Congress, including and perhaps especially BARNEY FRANK, were well aware that Fannie and Freddie were in deep trouble due to corruption and incompetence and yet they DID NOTHING to stop it.

Remember this statement by Frank during a hearing on September 10, 2003, before the House Committee on Financial Services considering a Bush administration proposal to further regulate Fannie and Freddie?

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=_MGT_cSi7Rs
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1RZVw3no2A4

"I want to begin by saying that I am glad to consider the legislation, but I do not think we are facing any kind of a crisis. That is, in my view, the two government sponsored enterprises we are talking about here, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, are not in a crisis. We have recently had an accounting problem with Freddie Mac that has led to people being dismissed, as appears to be appropriate. I do not think at this point there is a problem with a threat to the Treasury."

I don't think there was any question Frank knew then that there was a threat to the Treasury. But let's say, just for argument's sake, that you happen to believe Barney Frank honestly "missed" the warning signs in 2003 and 2004. What about 2008?

According to the Globe story:

In July 2008, then-Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson called Frank and told him the government would need to spend "billions of taxpayer dollars to backstop the institutions from catastrophic failure," according to Paulson's recent book. Frank, despite that conversation, appeared on national television two days later and said the companies were "fundamentally sound, not in danger of going under."

Unlike 2003 when, Frank said, he didn't realize what was going on this time, he was deliberately trying to reassure the public, he said.

"It was part of a conscious strategy to say to people, "Hey, look, we think we can handle this,"" he said. "It didn't work."

Less than two months later, the government seized Fannie and Freddie and the bailout began.

And it hasn't stopped yet. Just yesterday, we learned that the Obama administration projects losses on the two entities could approach $363 billion.

http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2010-10-21/fannie-freddie-may-draw-363-billion-fhfa-says-update1-.html

And there is no upper limit to taxpayer losses over the long term.

I find it pathetic and insulting that Barney Frank, the consummate Washington insider, would try to "play dumb" with respect to corruption at Fannie and Freddie. He knew what was happening at Fannie and Freddie. He actively blocked attempts to reform the institutions and then lied, by his own admission, to the American people about the whole sordid affair.

Frank's unwillingness to hold Fannie and Freddie accountable has nothing to do with wearing "ideological blinders." It has to do with Frank's "ethical blinders."

Correct. But if you say you "shot to kill" then you are making a statement that you only intended to kill the person and not end the conflict. That's voluntary mansluaghter, at the least.

Just saying WLBT does exist, not on the old frequency and not analog.
He says the TV has a "big adapter" so it must be a DTV adapter and it must be working.

Of course, he could take the adapter off and try to pick up some analog stations from Mexico. That might be interesting.

Someone must have a leaky cable setup near you. There should not be any over the air signals on the old analog channels. There is the possibility that someone is rebroadcasting the signal but I doubt it.

And don't put down over the air DTV. At least in Detroit, the picture quality is every bit as good as cable with just a modest external antenna. The best part is its free - so far.

The Sony TV FM/AM receiver was already plugged into a wall outlet at the Goodwill store.I fiddled around with the controls and I picked up WLBT Channel 3 tv station.Mind you, there was no antenna on the receiver, I reckon that is why the picture was snowy looking on the tv tube.I am not going to hook up an antenna, why should I do that?

Doubt very much. Mississipi is too far away to pickup VHF/UHF frequencies under normal propagation conditions.

WLBT-TV uses channel 30,according to Wiki. The FCC data shows channel 9 (must be out of date info) . Their logo STILL shows channel 3 . All video transmissions in the US supposedly are DTV at this time.
But,there could be a backup/local relay scenario of some sort(My conjecture) . They may have kept the old hardware just in case the new stuff conks out, but it should not be on the air at this stage,at least as far as I know.

IF Everyone has a New HDTV a/o a New HD2STV Converter hooked up to an old Analog STV : Who would there be out there for them to Broadcast to ?

And after a year the HDTV Broadcast Equipment is SOLID or has been Replace -cause- HDTV is now their Money Maker -and- old Analog STV is a dead non-revenue stream. {why waste the power}

Antennas for Free Over-the-Air HDTV {STV too}

1 - Basic Non-Amplified & Fixed Position
For Free Over-the-Air HDTV {STV too} this works well where all the TV signals are coming from the same general direction <30 Degree Arc; and is good for <20 Miles Line-of-Sight.

12~15 Miles away from Sutro Tower and Mt San Bruno.

Family with new HDTVs and new HD2STV Converter Boxes hooker-up to STVs in Stockton, CA roughly 30 Miles away from the Walnut Grove TV Towers.

-read- The Tall Towers of Walnut Grove, CA
http://www.fybush.com/sites/2005/site-051111.html
-note- They really don't need the Rotor because for them Stockton to Walnut Grove HDTV Signals since all are with <5 Degrees of Arc.

http://www.city-data.com/towers/cell-Walnut-Grove-California.html#Antenna

OBTW - None of these seem to work up here in Twain Harte, CA [70 Miles] because we are behind a Hill {East-Side} and would have to run a Coax Cable +500 Ft and another +50 Ft up a Tree.
The guy on the 'Valley' West-Side of Hill gets fairly good HDTV signals with a big older VHF/UHF TV Antenna* that he has had for many years.
* Yes older VHF/UHF TV Antennas work very well with the new HDTV Digital Signals -cause- Only the TV has to be a HD{Digital}TV.

CATV channel 3 is usually not occupied by anything important as this is the RF modulator frequency used by most VCRs, etc. Over the air HD has better signal quality than cable or satellite. Coohoo is missing out on a lot of cool stuff, in his endless quest for curmudgeonism.

Channel 3 goes around the world when conditions are right. Low band VHF

They keep the "3" in their name so people don't have to remember 9, er 30, er 3. It is just part of their informal name. It means nothing technical, other than it used to be a TV channel that the station used to be on.

2143. OT: Humor from the Maldives

COLOMBO - The Maldives expressed "shock and disgust" Wednesday after a video surfaced of a Swiss couple being mocked and insulted by a celebrant during their marriage ceremony at a luxury hotel.

In the video, posted on YouTube several days ago, a couple can be seen seated opposite the celebrant as they renew their wedding vows at the Vilu Reef hotel, which charges 400 dollars a night for the use of its honeymoon suite.

Speaking in the local Dhivehi language, the celebrant calls the couple "swine" amid a host of other insults during a hateful profanity-laced tirade littered with often bizarre personal and religious-tinged taunts.

Muslim-majority Maldives, a nation of 1,192 tiny coral islets scattered some 550 miles (880 kilometres) across the equator, is one of South Asia's most expensive holiday destinations and is popular among Western honeymooners.

Foreign Minister Ahmed Shaheed said he was "horrified" to see the video.

"I was shocked and horrified," Shaheed told AFP when contacted in the capital of the atoll nation, Male. "I could not see the entire video because my children were around and I didn't want them to hear the bad language that was used.

"This is a rip-off of the couple who in good faith went to this resort to renew their vows. This incident will damage the reputation we have built over the years for professional quality service.

"I expect the hotel to refund the money and make a full apology."

Vilu Reef general manager Mohamed Rasheed said the hotel had apologized to the couple who had the ceremony on October 11 and had taken disciplinary action against those involved.

The disgraced celebrant has been suspended and the hotel company, Sun Hotels and Resorts, said in a brief statement it had asked the police to investigate.

"We have apologized to the couple as well as to the general public," Rasheed told AFP when contacted by telephone. "The man had used filthy language. Otherwise the ceremony was OK."

He said the resort, a typical Malidivian island fringed by turquoise water and white sand beaches, has been conducting marriage ceremonies for a decade.

The hotel offers ceremonies to renew wedding vows on its website, saying couples can "seal your everlasting love" as "the Maldivian sunset transforms the sky into a kaleidoscope of romantic hues"

Guests pay 1,300 dollars for the ceremony with the services of a celebrant thrown in.

The local Minivan newspaper said the man conducting the ceremony was pretending to read traditional marriage vows off a piece of paper, but was instead holding an employment contract for employees at the hotel.

"Various types of insults about the woman and the man, their clothing and demeanour, are being spoken throughout in the form of a running commentary in a sports video," the Minivan News website said.

The video, which contains strong and abusive language, can be seen here.

My DirecTV does not have channel 30.
Channel 1 is a DirecTV Customer Information Channel.Below channel 1 is channel 3 (WLBT) and then channel 12 (WJTV) and below that is channel 16 (WAPT) and below that is channel 29 (WMPN) and below that is channel 34 WRBJ) and below that is channel 35 (WUFX) and below that is channel 40 (WDBD) Those channels (except for channel 1) are the local Jackson area tv stations, I do think so.Below those channels are probally over 200 channels I can pick up with my DirecTV service.I don't know how many channels I get, I have tried to count them before.Most of them do not interest me at all.There are a lot of XM music channels I can tune in/click on too.

If I had a converter hooked up to receive HDTV channels, I think I could receive channel 30.I think.

"The NAB’s getting plenty of advice – from manufacturers, the music business…"

"The open letter from longtime Consumer Electronics Association chief Gary Shapiro is a sermon about the free market – and an invitation for NAB boss Gordon Smith to come visit the Consumer Electronics Show in January to “explore the next generation of devices enabling consumers to access local broadcast content.” Shapiro says “in touring the show floor, I think you will find that the free-market – not government mandates – holds the best hope for ensuring that our industries continue to innovate and thrive.” Shapiro almost sounds annoyed that the CEA is being dragged into the fight between the NAB and the music industry. But since it is – “we assure you that your strategy of using us to kill this [performance royalty] legislation is failing.” He says “we have yet to identify one member of Congress willing to support your attempt to impose old FM technology [ouch] on new portable products.” He calls radio a “legacy horse and buggy industry” trying to “preserve its former monopoly.” Shapiro takes a harsh approach toward the royalty – he thinks broadcast radio should be paying "the same as that assessed to online music streaming services and other new technologies." But Shapiro’s not closing the door. He says “We are happy to work with you [on] promoting FM and HD Radio in the marketplace." Read Shapiro’s letter here. "

"Canada in Digital Radio Limbo"

"OTTAWA, Ontario — Going nowhere: These two words succinctly sum up the state of Canadian digital radio broadcasting, or DRB.

Despite years of offering Eureka-147 DAB simulcasts of AM and FM signals in L-band (1452–1492 MHz) in major metro markets, broadcasters have virtually no listeners and no market profile.

“L-band DAB is in limbo,” said Canadian broadcast technical consultant Wayne Stacey, who has been involved with Canadian DRB for the past 20 years. “In fact, from a transmission standpoint, the band is dying.”

Meanwhile, HD Radio — the iBiquity Digital in-channel, on-band (IBOC) system — has been authorized for experimental FM broadcasts in Canada since 2006.

Yet, despite the willingness of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission to fast-track licenses in this format, “not one broadcaster has come to us to request one,” said CRTC Vice Chair Michel Arpin. “Industry Canada, who is in charge of the radio spectrum, has said that they are also willing to set HD Radio standards, but nobody has cared to file a request with them either.”

“AM and FM are technologies decades out of date,” said David Bray; a partner in Hennessy & Bray Communications, which has been heavily involved in Canadian DAB. “Younger listeners are tuning out in significant numbers. Yet broadcasters have been unwilling or unable to agree on a unified course of action. Instead all of their efforts have been directed to protecting their fragile profit margins in the short term. That’s fine if you plan to retire within five years or so. For those planning on a career in the industry beyond that, the future is in peril."

Why DAB failed

In June 1990, the now-defunct Canadian Association of Broadcasters dazzled delegates at its annual convention in Ottawa, driving them around in a van equipped with a DAB receiver. This was before widespread use of the Internet or satellite radio, at a time when analog services ruled and cellphones were still the size of bricks.

Given its CD-quality sound and reliable coverage, the Eureka-147 DAB signals wowed the delegates and won their backing for taking Canadian radio digital.

With the support of the Canadian government and the broadcasting industry, Canada began to plan and then rollout DAB transmitters in Montreal; Vancouver, British Columbia; Toronto, Ottawa and Windsor, Ontario (across the river from Detroit).

In all cases, the 70-odd stations were licensed to simulcast existing AM and FM program feeds. Original content was frowned upon, both because the broadcasters wanted to move the Canadian public from analog to digital, and also because new services might lead to new competition, disrupting the existing broadcasting apple cart.

Unfortunately, the refusal of receiver manufacturers to supply the Canadian market with low-cost L-band receivers kept the medium from taking off.

“The problem is that Canada’s DRB plans used different spectrum from Europe, where VHF-band DRB receivers were available,” said Arpin. “Once the United States rejected DAB in favor of IBOC, that was it. With only 30 million people, Canada was not large enough to justify the mass-production of DAB receivers that couldn’t be sold elsewhere.”

Add General Motor’s withdrawal from a commitment to installed AM/FM/DAB receivers in its cars, and the die was cast. The signals were there, but no one had the radios to hear them.

(Save Wayne Stacey: “I still listen to CBC’s DAB services in Ottawa, thanks to a DAB card in my computer,” he said.) One last hurdle: Industry Canada is now reviewing its allocation of L-band for DAB. The process, which is due to finish next year, will likely see radio’s share of the band decreased for other services. As a result of this review, Industry Canada stop issuing new DAB technical licenses in 2006, which is also when the CRTC decided to let broadcasters start putting original programming on their DAB channels in a bid to attract listeners.

Today, DAB transmitters at Toronto’s CN Tower and other transmitter sites are beginning to fail due to old age, and when they do die, no one replaces them.

“I know that a few broadcasters have handed back their L-band licenses, rather than buy new equipment,” said Stacey. “CBC Radio has given back theirs in Montréal. The service was taken off for tower renovation, but it is not being restored after the work is done.”

HD Radio?

DAB’s demise was foreseen by the CRTC in 2006, when it reversed its earlier DAB-only policy in favor of allowing HD Radio to be used in Canada as well. HD Radio FM tests conducted in Toronto proved that the digital technology could coexist with analog FM services.

However, Canadian broadcasters are not moving to add HD Radio services, preferring instead to stick with analog AM and FM.

“Broadcasters here still want to see how HD Radio fares in the States, where the rollout has slowed down and issues with AM HD Radio have yet to be fixed,” said Stacey. “... So our broadcasters — already burned by DAB — are understandably reluctant to commit any money to HD Radio, especially in this economy.”

Today, Canadian radio is firmly committed to AM and FM, with no action by either public or private broadcasters to make the permanent jump to digital.

“I have to wonder what the broadcasters are thinking,” said Arpin. “It is now possible to get Internet radio in the car over your iPhone, with access to thousands of stations worldwide. Yet Canadian radio is staying analog! What will they do when GM and Ford start putting wirelessly connected Internet radios in cars?”

“Nothing can be done until Industry Canada decides what will be done with the L-band,” said Stacey. “The whole future of L-band DAB is up in the air.”

Radio World contacted several of Canada’s major broadcasters and requested interviews; none were willing to prove a spokesperson to clarify their digital plans.

What appears clear is that the Canadian radio industry, having invested heavily in Eureka-147 DAB only to see it go nowhere, is adverse to taking such a risk again.

“It’s not an understatement to say that the future of radio in Canada may depend on a viable digital solution,” said Bray. “It is very possible that, by the time they see the light, the power will have been shut off.”

My brother has an old original C Crane CC Radio. It's breaking down though after years and I want to get him another one. I see that Sangean does not produce them anymore. I see two on C Cranes site - the Plus and then the Radio 2 version. The 2 version picks up 2 meter ham which I'm not interested in. My brother wants this for AM radio only, no shortwave or ham.

Do they both pick up the AM band as well as the old original did? Is one much better than the other with regards to AM reception?

Thanks

Barney is the poster child for the mortgage mess and the housing collapse.

Don't forget it was Barney Frank who, as chairman of the Banking Committee in 2007, continued to push for easy mortgage rules – even for people who couldn't afford them and had no business getting mortgages.

In fact, the evidence shows that Frank prevented oversight and regulation of the mortgage business – setting the stage for the massive economic meltdown we have been living through.

As one of the most powerful Democratic members of Congress, Barney Frank did absolutely NOTHING to rein in Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac.

This ended in disaster, causing misery beyond description.

When Bill O'Reilly grilled him about this on his show, he hemmed and hawed and then he just shouted.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Unj-kcGOe5I

But the Barney Frank story gets even worse.

It is simply astounding that as chairman of the powerful House Financial Services Committee, Barney Frank was actually in charge of overseeing Wall Street.

After helping create the whole housing and mortgage collapse, then became the architect of the infamous $700 billion Wall Street bailout!

Remember – this was a time that folks like you and I on Main Street got no help at all as our housing values and stock portfolios plummeted and folks all over the country lost their jobs, businesses, and homes.

But now it really gets sick.

You may have read the extraordinary news that Barney Frank felt he had to personally loan his own campaign fund $200,000, adding to the almost $3 million he had raised from fat-cat donors.

This means he’s sweating.

Guess who actually is donating to Frank's campaign fund.

Lo and behold, the big donors to Barney Frank’s campaign are from big Wall Street and financial services companies!
